Residence hall rates increase

By Hannah Sanders
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students living in residence halls will have to pay a little more next year.

They will pay 6.5 percent more than they do now, according to the Consent Agenda of Fiscal Affairs and Audit. The Association of Residence Halls voted to increase the overall room charge by about $370 per year.

About 5 percent of the higher cost will cover increased expenses for salaries and benefits, food, utilities, maintenance and other operating expenditures, according to the consent agenda. The other 1.5 percent will consolidate a mandatory user fee that supports network and computer lab infrastructure.

Meal plans will increase by about $4 per month, and apartment rent might increase by only $10 per month.

"It is still cheaper than living off campus, so I don't have a problem with it," Mike Harreld, sophomore in math, said.

Skylar Harper, assistant director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said the money generated by the increase, about $140,000, will be put into things students have requested, like new furniture, kitchenette and laundry improvements, and minor renovations in the Marlatt Hall lobby.

Harper said he knew residents are afraid all funds will go to Jardine Apartments, but he said both traditional residence halls and Jardine will benefit.

"The residence halls have been supplemented by revenue brought in by apartments in the past, so it will all even out," Harper said.

Meredith Lindsey, freshman in theater and West Hall resident, said she wasn't pleased with the increase.

"I don't feel it's justified in the slightest," she said. "It's already difficult enough for students like me to pay for college without having to worry whether or not they'll jack up prices."

Sierra Wiegert, sophomore in computer science and Boyd Hall resident, said the increase is acceptable.

"As long as the money is benefiting those living in the residence halls, the increase isn't that big of a deal," Wiegert said.

ARH was not available for comment at press time.

Students must exercise caution when driving in winter weather

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The forecast for Thanksgiving break is mild – mid-60s and cloudy, with no precipitation – but Kansas weather can turn at the drop of a hat.

Students who face long drives on holiday breaks should take extra care to prepare for the trip.

Common-sense practices can make driving much safer.

In icy or snowy weather, drivers should take precautions like leaving extra distance between their vehicle and the vehicles ahead, driving more slowly and accelerating and braking more slowly, according to the Kansas Department of Transportation Web site.

At all times, drivers should wear a seatbelt and try to drive only in daylight. After dusk and before dawn, visibility is lower, and deer are more likely to be on the roads.

When she makes the three-hour drive home to Bellevue, Neb., on Tuesday, Julia Paul, junior in animal science, said she will make sure she has her cell phone with her. Paul said her parents worry about her getting home safely.

"They don't like me driving in the dark," Paul said. "I'm actually a AAA member because of that."

Paul said she always is concerned about her car breaking down on the road, but she plans to be prepared as the weather gets colder.

"I'll probably put some blankets in my car, just in case," she said.

Jenny Glodowski, junior in family studies and human services, said she also will put things like blankets and gloves in her car when she drives home to Schuyler, Neb., for Thanksgiving.

"Having a cell phone doesn't help, because I don't always get service on the way home," she said. "I will probably check my oil and make sure my lights work, if I was driving home at night."

Glodowski said she nearly rolled her car when she was driving home last year.

"Everybody was going about 30 miles an hour," she said. "I tried to pass them, and it was really slick on the other side of the road. I spun around like six times. Now I'll just follow the slow people and not try to pass them."

When caught in a winter storm:

Stay in the vehicle: You quickly will become disoriented in wind-driven snow and cold. Run the motor about 10 minutes each hour for heat. Open the window a little for fresh air to avoid carbon monoxide poisoning.

Make sure the exhaust pipe is not blocked.

Be visible to rescuers: Turn on the dome light at night when running the engine. Tie a colored cloth, preferably red, to your antenna or door. After snow stops falling, raise the hood to indicate you need help.

Exercise: From time to time, move arms, legs, fingers and toes vigorously to keep blood circulating and to keep warm.

Winter storm survival kit:

• Mobile phone, charger, batteries • Blankets • Flashlight • Extra batteries • First-aid kit • High-calorie, non-perishable food • Warm clothing to keep dry • Large empty can to use as an emergency toilet • Tissues and paper towels • Extra supplies in small cans and waterproof matches • Multi screw for drinking water • Sack of sand or cat litter for traction • Shovel • Windshield scraper and brush • Fuel kit in trunk • Spare tire • Battery booster cables • Water container • Compass and road maps

Winterizing your car:

Inspect the distributor. Check the battery.

Always leave with a full tank of gas. Change and adjust the spark plugs.

Check the ignition, brakes, wiring, hoses and fan belts. Check the air, fuel and emission filters, and the PCV valve.

Check the tires for air, sidewall wear and tread depth. Check antifreeze levels and the freeze line.

Get a tune-up (check the owner's manual for the recommended interval) to ensure better gas mileage, quicker starts and faster response on pick-up and passing power.

High school students occupy restaurant's smoking area in protest

Emily Berry, 17; Skylar Humbord, 16; Janelle McIlvain, senior in family sciences and human services; and Becca Greff, 15, talk while participating in a sit-in smoking protest, "Operation Sitting Duck," Thursday evening at Buffalo Wild Wings.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They came, they saw, they sat right down.

Manhattan High School students, spearheaded by the group Teens Leading Teens, had their third-annual smoking crash, Operation Sitting Duck, Thursday night as blue-shirted students, parents and supporters invaded the designated smoking section of the Aggieville bar and grill Buffalo Wild Wings.

The sit-in, which lasted from 7 to 9 p.m., came one month after Manhattan city commissioners tossed a proposed smoking ban. However, the continuation of controversial anti-smoking policies sprouting up across the nation is motivation for local supporters.

For the last three years, Buffalo Wild Wings has been home to the event, which originated as a collaboration between a former manager and a former high-school age employee, both of whom supported smoking legislation.

The event has continued despite the absence of the founders, and several employees grabbed T-shirts from students at the entrance to show their support for the cause.

Buffalo Wild Wings, either locally or as corporate policy, has not taken a stance on the issue.

"I'm not for or against it," said manager Ami Walters, Manhattan resident. "If it happens, great. If it doesn't, great."

Employees of the restaurant are split in their support of smoking legislation, Walters said, and though the issue is a heavily contested one, there were no fears unpleasant encounters.

"I think it's great that they're coming out and supporting something they feel strongly about," she said.

While some might see the event as confrontational, Kari Quiton-Beard, drug and alcohol prevention coordinator for USD 383, said the intended result is not conflict but education.

"Education and awareness is one of our primary goals, and for us it's always been a health perspective," she said.

Quiton-Beard, who also sponsors Teens Leading Teens, said the group,

Soldiers commended for leadership, flying in Iraq

By Katelynn Hasler
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 150 soldiers received achievement medals honoring their service in Iraq during a ceremony in McCain Auditorium Thursday.

The soldiers all were members of the former 82nd Medical Company, which was reflagged in the ceremony following the awards presentation. The company just returned from a one-year deployment to Iraq, its third tour of duty in five years.

One award winner was Captain Justin Avery. He received a Bronze Star Medal, which is given for superior leadership, he said. Of the 270 awards given, 15 were Bronze Star Medals. Avery also received two Air Medals, which are given for every six months flying or for particular flying acts, he said.

"It's kind of mixed feelings about this award," Avery said. "Our particular job is more rewarding knowing that you saved lives than receiving the actual medal is. It's a very good thing for our company, though."

Avery's wife, Samantha, was present at the awards ceremony and expressed pride for her husband's achievements.

"It's nice for everybody else to see that he's a hero, not just his family," she said.

Another member of the audience, Maddy Tobias, said she traveled from Phoenix to see her friend, whom she hadn't seen in three years, receive an award.

"I felt really proud of her," Tobias said. "I'm proud of all her military things."

Her friend, Ginny Akins, is a staff sergeant and received one Army Commendation Medal and two Air Medals.

"It feels good that people get recognized for what they've done and all the hard work they've put in," Akins said.

Major Dustin K. Elder, Commander of the 82nd Medical Company, shared remarks after the awards were presented. During the company's year of deployment, he said, soldiers completed 2,200 combat missions and evacuated 2,800 wounded soldiers.

The company was constituted in 1943, and its soldiers have been deployed to Vietnam, Saudi Arabia and Somalia. It was officially reactivated as Charlie Company under Big Red One. This changed its assignment to the 2nd Battalion, 1st Aviation Regiment, 1st Combat Aviation Brigade, 1st Infantry Division at Fort Riley. "Although our name will change," Elder said, "the noble mission of evacuating our fellow soldiers will not."

Bilingual play penned by K-State professor opens to packed theater

By Jesse Sachdeva
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The aisles of the Little Theatre were packed, and its foyer overflowed with people Thursday night.

Students, faculty and friends gathered to watch a performance of "Breaking Color Boundaries - Rompiendo Límites en Colores," a play written by Alberto Domingo González Valdés, visiting assistant professor of Spanish.

Valdés' native Cuba is the setting for the play, and elements specific to that setting, including race relations and social and spiritual customs, create an entirely different world. Even the local language was adopted as the dialogue frequently jumped back and forth between English and Spanish.

The play tells the story of Billillo, an Afro-Cuban boy and his unrequited love for his Mulatto neighbor, Mayeya. The characters are played by Blake Zogleman, senior in business administration, and Guadalupe Magana, senior in secondary education, respectively.

Always afraid to express his love, Billillo is driven to madness after seeing Mayeya in the arms of a foreign tourist.

Playing up both comedic and dramatic elements, the love story is juxtaposed with colorful backdrops and fast-paced performances by K-State's latin dance club, LatiRitmo.

Dressed in bold red and black outfits, members of LatiRitmo performed quick salsa routines during a dance-hall scene.

Zogleman said he and the other cast members prepared for the play for six weeks.

Brittany Bruns, senior in finance, managed to snag a seat in the theater for the show.

"It was nice to see the different perspective they put on it," Bruns said. "The bilingualism made it a little hard to follow at times, though."

Valdés said he was pleased with the turnout.

"I'm happy with how it has turned out. We were able to build on the first draft of the script throughout the process of daily rehearsing over the last month," he said.

Because of the large number of audience members, Valdés said the cast might give a second performance after Thanksgiving.

Ahhh. Thanksgiving break is only four days away.

It is easy to be swept away by the holiday excitement, there are some responsibilities students should remember before driving home.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

First and foremost is safety. When driving long distances, it is important to make sure your vehicle can make the journey. Check your oil, air up your tires, and make sure everything is working properly.

However, pre-trip preparation might not be enough if something happens on the road. That is why it is best to pack a car safety kit with jumper cables, a spare tire, road flares and a flashlight.

It's also wise to be prepared to drive in all types of weather. Drive slowly in the rain, sleet or snow. If visibility is poor, pull over to the side of the road and wait until it improves.

The roads will be crowded, so be respectful of other drivers. Everyone will be in a hurry to get home, but if you drive the speed limit, you will be less likely to get a ticket or have a wreck.

So when preparing to reach your Thanksgiving destination, use common sense. Take care of your vehicle and drive safely. Your mom will thank you for it when you arrive home safe and sound.

There's something extremely wrong in today's culture, besides that the country of Iran still exists. It can be summed up in one word: responsibility. Well, the lack of it, actually, so it's three words.

In today's fast-paced, modern, liberal society, it's easy to lose a sense of responsibility.

How many of us remember the infamous hot coffee lawsuit against McDonald's that led to the "Caution: contents may be hot" label? Frivolous lawsuits cost U.S. small businesses $88 billion a year – an average of $150,000 for every company in the country, according to a June study by the U.S. Chamber Institute for Legal Reform.

Instead of learning from a simple mistake and taking responsibility for your horrible driving that led to your spilt coffee, people seem to be more inclined to take a financially better route and sue for no reason.

For instance, according to Jury Verdict Research, the average medical malpractice jury award has risen almost 75 percent from 1995 to 2005 to an average $3.5 million per case, with some awards going as high as $40 million.

Then there are the kids. We've heard time and again that children watch too much TV. But why?

Again, responsibility, this time on behalf of parents. Instead of doing their job and playing catch with Johnny in the backyard, it's easier to sit him in front of "SpongeBob SquarePants."

In its latest paper, the International Journal of Obesity monitored TV watching and body mass.

Between the ages of 5 and 13, children watched an average of 2.33 hours of TV per weeknight. Children 13-15 years old watched an average of 24.6 per week.

Another glaring example is divorce. There are some cases in which divorce is necessary – even my parents are divorced. But how many marriages could be saved if couples took responsibility for their actions and worked through their problems instead of taking the easy way out? Half of first marriages, 67 percent of second marriages and 74 percent of third marriages end in divorce, according to Jennifer Baker of the Forest Institute of Professional Psychology.

Where does this lack of responsibility begin?

Many places.

Where can it be solved?

With each and every one of you.

As college students, we often partake in behavior that is, well, unpredictable. But the answer lies with you.

Watch your actions, admit fault and take responsibility. Since your mother's not here, I'll say it: be careful.

Look beyond '08 for interesting election in '10

Now that the hustle and bustle of the 2006 elections have mostly passed, we can focus on an election that will have much more drama. No, not 2008 – I'm talking about 2010.

Sure, 2008 will have some interesting anti-Hillary ads, and we'll see if Rep.-elect Nancy Boyda lives up to her promises, but how can Kansans not look ahead to 2010?

Kansas' own Sen. Sam Brownback is thought to be one of the possible social conservatives vying for the Republican nomination for president in '08. However, if he decides against this, or isn't nominated, his term in the Senate will expire in 2010. It is widely believed the senior senator will not seek re-election, honoring his self-imposed term limit. This would leave a Senate seat wide open. And here is where it gets interesting.

Another term that will expire in 2010 is that of Gov. Kathleen Sebelius. She was quoted in the Nov. 14 edition of the Collegian all but denying she would accept a position in a Democratic White House.

"I ran for governor to be governor of this great state," she said. "I intend to be right here."

What better way to serve Kansas than as a voice in the U.S. Senate? Yes, a Democratic senator from Kansas. According to the Kansas Secretary of State's Web site, Sebelius won re-election by 18 percentage points (59 to 41). This proves her popularity, but against whom might she run?

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., was elected in 1996 after serving in the U.S. House of Representatives for 26 years, representing Kansas' first district. Ironically, he won the seat vacated by retiring Congressman Keith Sebelius, father-in-law of the current governor. But taking from this model, a possible opponent for Sebelius in '10 could be Rep. Jerry Moran. The Republican won "The Big First" with almost 80 percent of the votes, according to the Secretary of State's Web site.

Two well-known politicians in '10 could make one heck of a race, the name recognition of Sebelius to Moran's popularity and party affiliation – don't forget, this is a red state. And who knows, maybe Rep. Jim Ryun will make a triumphant return to seek the seat vacated by Brownback. But either way, the national political scene could be extremely different in four years, so let's focus on a smaller scale.

In 2010, Paul Morrison will most likely seek re-election as Kansas attorney general. After all of the bickering and negative campaigning of the 2006 election, from both sides, 2010 will be a test for Morrison. If he lives up to everything he said, he should win in a landslide, but if not, he will get the axe.

While pundits and politicians are arguing and smearing in preparation for 2008, I encourage all of you to tune out Sean Hannity's verbal diarrhea, ignore the Barack Obama bandwagon, and look ahead to 2010. Who knows? Maybe by then the central issue won't be Iraq.

POLITICAL CARTOON | By Donnie Jay

From the Public Editor: Readers want blotter in print

I never cease to be amazed by the natural desire to know your neighbor's misdeeds.

Complaints, direct and indirect, have come in saying readers miss reading the blotter, the Collegian's list of local arrests that used to appear on Page 2 each day.

The latest, from Tuesday's Fourum: "Can you guys please put the blotter back in the paper? I like to laugh at the felons when I'm in class, and I don't like to have to look for that. And it's probably the best part of the paper, too."

I'll respond to that statement by each of its points. On the first count: the editors removed it at the beginning of this semester to make room for Page 2 features the blotter blocked.

"The blotter's a waste of space," Emily Lawrence, editor in chief, said. "I don't think every single little arrest is news."

Lawrence has a point, but I do believe all arrests should be made public as a check on government power. The people have a right to know who the police have in jail. They usually want to know, too.

Managing Editor Kerry Fischer said the blotter won't be back this semester because finals week is so close, and it's too late to redesign the page. She said the blotter also can grow too big to fit the news hole on Page 2, especially after a busy weekend.

The officers of the Riley County Police Department are just too good at their jobs.

On the second count: You can still laugh at the unlawful – or unlucky – souls caught by the RCPD while in class, you only need a wireless-equipped laptop.

Plus, your professor can tell you're not paying attention when there's a printed Collegian in front of your face.

Look at a computer screen, and most educators will think you're taking notes, which is what you're supposed to do in class, right?

On the third count: I'll have you know the most common comment I hear is no longer "I want more Fourum."

The new leader is, essentially, "I have no complaints. The Collegian has been good this semester."

So there.

This topic reminds me of the funny memories I have from past semesters of people coming into the newsroom to demand we cut the blotter. Specifically, the parts with their names.

One woman from a year ago stands out in particular. I was in the newsroom while she told the editors how they could not publish her name, just because she asked.

This is not true. The Collegian never omits anyone from the list of arrests to save them face, not even its employees.

This woman kept begging and begging for the Collegian to leave out her name, but to no avail. After a while I cut in and asked, "So, did you do it?"

"Well, yeah," she replied.

Senate grants councils small operating budgets

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

College councils no longer will have to pay for photocopies and staples out of their own pockets.

After problems with meeting deadlines and misused funds, Student Senate approved a $300 operating budget for each college council at their meeting Thursday.

Whereas the previous guidelines called for councils to request funds for events and other needs all together, the new bill, which passed with a vote of 52-3-2, automatically grants a small operating budget, then requires councils to apply for event funding separately. They can request funds for up to five events per year.

College council allocations committee chair Amy Schultz said councils will receive the operating budget earlier under the new guidelines, at the start of each fiscal year in July.

"Before, we had a lot of college councils turn in re-

Student Senate passed a recommendation for the disbursement of $394,000 in the City/University Special Projects Fund for 2007. Senators chose seven main projects:

$160,000	Widening Denison Avenue to include middle turning lane
$50,000	Support for the National Institute for Strategic Technology Acquisition and Commercialization Industrial park
$50,000	Expansion of University Gardens
$51,000	Lighting and sidewalk improvements on campus
$33,000	Construction of a sidewalk on the south side of Todd Street
$40,000	Creation of six "You Are Here" campus map kiosks
$10,000	Support for the "Good Neighbors" program

For more information on all of these projects, go to www.ksu.edu/news/sps and look at the Nov. 9 agenda.

quests late, and we were not able to fund them," she said. "With this, college councils receive their funding earlier, and it kind of relieves little problems like that that we had each year."

Senators mentioned some councils also tried to get extra funding for events through other budgetary requests.

"This creates uniformity so we don't have one council requesting all these things and another requesting very little," Schultz said. "It ensures that college councils are not granted more than five event requests."

Some senators, however, said the councils should have to request money for a specific purpose.

"I don't like the idea that they get money automatically," engineering senator Tim Weninger said. "In my experience, we don't just give away money. It has to be for something."

In other business, senators approved the appointment of a new elections commissioner, Tyson Moore, senior in information systems, for the 2006-07 Senate term.

Coggins moves from supporter to leader

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Claire Coggins is the leader of the K-State women's basketball team.

Two years ago, that couldn't have been further from the truth.

During her sophomore season, Coggins was, at best, the fourth option behind All-Big 12 Conference guard Laurie Koehn and forwards Megan Mahoney and All-American Kendra Wecker. She started every Big 12 game except one on a senior-laden team that won 28 games and advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

"I came in being one of the youngest players with the big four, and I was very used to that type of a role," Coggins said.

With the loss of Nicole Ohlde, Wecker, Koehn and Mahoney to the WNBA, Coggins was one of the last remaining players for K-State.

"Claire went from an 18- to 20-minute-per-game player with an identity that was very supplemental, to walking in the gym as a junior with a complete and total load on her shoulder," coach Deb Patterson said.

With three freshmen and a sophomore starting with her last season, Coggins had to step up her game and become more of a vocal leader on the court.

"I was finding myself as a player and a leader," Coggins said. "I think it all gelled together just fine for me and my team."

ONE OF ONLY TWO

This season, Coggins is one of only two seniors on the team. A third senior, Twiggy McIntyre, unexpectedly left during the summer, leaving Coggins as the only senior to carry the offensive load.

"Claire is a great leader and is just a great presence to have on the court, because she brings experience to the game that a lot of us don't have," sophomore guard Shalee Lehning said.

As a freshman, Coggins averaged 12 minutes a game and provided depth for K-State in the back court.

"I love to look at them and think, 'Oh my gosh, that is what I was like as a freshman, and I had no clue, either,'" Coggins said.

Coggins is not only expected to assume the role of leader, but also she is expected to assume the role of the go-to player. She led the team in scoring last year and was the only Wildcat recognized on the All-Big 12 preseason women's basketball team.

"We have a great deal of confidence in her knowing that she is willing to take everything on her back and be ready to play," Lehning said.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

The main concern of Coggins and the team is their performance this season. But many wonder what the future holds for the senior.

She was named pre-season Honorable Mention All-Big 12, and Patterson said Coggins is potentially one of the best players in the conference.

"She has put it out there and demonstrated what she is capable of," Patterson said.

Coggins has not ruled out the possibility of continuing her career in basketball after her eligibility runs out this season.

"I just want to take each day, each game, and try to be the best I can, and if it's meant to be, I'll keep playing. If it's not, then it's not," Coggins said.

FBC | Another day, another award for freshman quarterback Freeman

K-State's Josh Freeman picked up his third national award this week and fourth overall, as the quarterback has been chosen by the fans as the Cingular All-America Player of the Week after the freshman led the Wildcats to a dramatic 45-42 win Saturday night over defending national champion and No. 4 Texas.

Freeman, the first-ever Wildcat to take the weekly honor, received 42 percent of the votes to claim the award over week 10 winner Darren McFadden (37 percent) of Arkansas. Georgia defensive back Tra Battle (14 percent) and Connecticut running back Donald Brown (7 percent) finished third and fourth, respectively.

Players were nominated for this week's award by a panel of ESPN college football analysts based on their outstanding performances last weekend.

The award was announced Thursday at halftime of the Pittsburgh/West Virginia game on ESPN.

The Cingular All-America Player of the Week winner's list in 2006 includes Rutgers running back Ray Rice, Notre Dame quarterback Brady Quinn, Michigan wide receiver Mario Manningham, Georgia Tech wide receiver Calvin Johnson, Tennessee quarterback Erik Ainge, Texas quarterback Colt McCoy, Brigham Young quarterback John Beck and Arkansas' Darren McFadden.

The Kansas City, Mo., native set a new K-State freshman passing mark for a season Saturday and now has 1,407 yards on the year. In his last three games, all conference wins, Freeman is 55-of-77 for 681 yards and six touchdowns.

Freeman has picked up Big 12 Offensive Player of the Week, Walter Camp National Offensive Player of the Week and the Master Coaches Survey National Offensive Player of the Week honors this week after his performance against Texas.

FBC | DVD of K-State's win over UT to be released for purchase

The K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics announced Thursday it will release a special edition DVD of the Wildcats' thrilling victory over No. 4 Texas just in time for the holiday season.

The "Instant Wildcat Classic" two-disc set includes the entire broadcast of the Wildcats' historic win over the defending national champion Longhorns, plus pregame footage from the game, including K-State's senior introductions and the fan appreciation thank-you videos that appeared on the video board at Snyder Family Stadium throughout the contest.

Also included on the two-disc set is coach Ron Prince's postgame news conference.

The "Wildcat Instant Classic" DVD set retails for $34.95 plus shipping and can be purchased online at www.k-statesports.com, in person at the Athletics Ticket Office in Bramlage Coliseum or by calling toll-free 1 (800) 221-CATS. The ticket office is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

EQU | Equestrian team to ride in 4-event competition at home

K-State hopes to avenge an early-season loss to Oklahoma State Saturday when it plays host to Oklahoma State and New Mexico State at Fox Creek Stables in Manhattan.

K-State traveled to Oklahoma State on Oct. 15 and fell to the Cowboys 1698.5-1720. "We're going to have to ride well," coach Teresa Slough said. "The last time against Oklahoma State, we tied and eventually lost. We hope to improve this time and get a victory over them."

The teams will compete in four events: equitation over fences, reining, Western horsemanship and equitation on the flat. Slough said the team has been working on technique and other strategies.

"We've been practicing the elements and patterns that we know we have to ride," she said. "We're just trying to get focused and ready to go."

This will be the last fall meet for the Wildcats. They will travel Feb. 24 to Waco, Texas, to face off against Baylor to begin their spring season.

Slough said the team hopes to finish the fall strong.

"Our biggest concern is how everyone rides and that everyone rides well and has a good trip," Slough said. "We'd really like to go into Christmas break with a win."

Wildcats go for 3 in a row against Golden Eagles

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite consistent shooting troubles through the beginning of the season, the K-State men's basketball team will take a 2-0 record into Saturday night's contest against Tennessee Tech.

The Wildcats beat Rutgers 55-41 Wednesday in Piscataway, N.J., in their first road test of the season.

After going 2-8 on the road last season, K-State got off to a better start this year by beating the Scarlet Knights of the Big East Conference.

Strong defense helped hold Rutgers to just 19-percent shooting from the field and allowed the Wildcats to win despite shooting poorly for the second straight game.

K-State shot just 32 percent, but the shooting woes of Rutgers helped the Wildcats coast to an easy victory.

Only one Rutgers player made more than one field goal: J.R. Inman with five.

Senior guard Lance Harris has been the unexpected leader of the Wildcats' offense so far, scoring 16.5 points and grabbing 10 rebounds per game.

K-State will try to shake its shooting slump Saturday when Tennessee Tech comes to Manhattan.

The Golden Eagles enter with a 1-0 record after beating Bluefield (Va.) College 110-69 Monday in Cookeville, Tenn.

Saturday's game will be the second meeting between the schools; K-State beat Tennessee Tech in the 1985-86 season.

Tennessee Tech was picked to finish third in the Ohio Valley Conference preseason poll.

The Golden Eagles are led by junior guard Anthony Fisher and senior guard Belton Rivers, who led the team last year with 12.9 and 12 points per game, respectively.

Fisher led the Golden Eagles with 18 points in the season-opening win.

About 150 tickets from the individual-game public allotment and 350 tickets unclaimed from the student allocation are available for Saturday's game.

The tickets, priced at $15 each, will be on sale from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. today at the Athletic Ticket Office in Bramlage Coliseum. If any tickets remain on game day, they will go on sale at 7 p.m. at the Northeast and Northwest ticket booths of Bramlage.

College basketball entertains all season, not just in March

I admit it. I am a college football fanatic, but it is never too early to celebrate a great basketball game.

Although college football is in the most crucial part of the season, it is not the only sport on primetime ESPN. College basketball, only a few weeks old, already has produced some great upsets and fun games. The great football match-ups of the Sunflower Showdown and the No. 1 vs. No. 2 matchup of Ohio State and Michigan are obviously the highlights of this weekend's events. But what is there to watch for sports fans before the weekend? Hockey? No offense to the sport, but I can recall only one friend who claimed to watch hockey.

It might not be March yet, but the intensity and drive of college basketball are just as thrilling to a true fan of the game.

There are several reasons to flip that channel to one of the many basketball games that will be shown almost every night on ESPN or one of its many networks.

THE UPSETS

Nearly everyone loves to see Cinderella teams like Gonzaga and George Mason upset the traditional powers of the NCAA Tournament, unless the power upset is your team, of course. Upsets do not just occur in March, though; teams in the Top 25 are always the main targets of mid-major conference teams. This year should be no different.

PRESEASON TOURNAMENTS

Preseason tournaments are the closest match-ups to March Madness fans will get until the actual thing.

The pre-season tournaments, which seem to grow every year, might be less alluring, but they do offer a glimpse into the pageantry of college basketball. Take, for example, Butler. It was chosen to finish sixth in the Horizon League but already has upset Notre Dame and Indiana in the NIT Season Tip-Off. Few people here know where Butler is or could even name another team in the Horizon Conference, but the Bulldogs already have received more national attention and television time than Kansas.

BRACKET ADVANTAGES

So many people fill out brackets for March Madness, but few actually follow the whole basketball season. Watching a few games in November on ESPN or Fox Sports Net will not only show previews of the teams, but also will give fans an early advantage on completing those frustrating brackets. Early fans will recognize trends and the likes and dislikes that people who watch college basketball later in the season will never catch. Maybe guys could even find that inside advantage to beat their girlfriends who choose the winning teams on the best mascot or team colors.

DICKEY V

Nothing gets me more excited for a basketball game than the vibrant, non-stop commentary of Dick Vitale. The announcer has been a mainstay of college basketball broadcasts since his not-so-successful attempt at coaching in the late 1970s. His catch phrases — "diaper dandies," "dipsy-doo dunker," and "PTPer" — just add to the already electric atmosphere of the games he calls. To imagine the spirit Vitale brings to the game, imagine the exact opposite of Bob Huggins.

Several upsets already have occurred, including the aforementioned Butler upsets, a Vermont upset over 16th-ranked Boston College, a Virginia upset over Top-10 Arizona and, of course, the beatdown of third-ranked Oral Roberts gave Kansas Wednesday.

Although teams might not be as solid as they will be in February, the intensity and level of competitiveness is just the same as it will be down the stretch. Why not watch the full season of a potentially amazing year of basketball, especially in Kansas? K-State is looking to change more than a decade of mediocrity with Huggins, Kansas is picked first in the nation by many polls, and Wichita State is ready to make another strong postseason run. All over the country, brackets are already being busted. Any night could produce the best game of the year.

As Vitale so often says, "It's awesome, baby!"

Graduate fair showcases math, science programs

By Regina Nowak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 2006 STEM Graduate Fair is today and Saturday for those considering graduate school, or master's degree students interested in K-State's doctoral programs.

Students can use this opportunity to learn more about K-State programs in science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM).

"It is an excellent opportunity," said Carol Shanklin, vice provost of the Graduate School.

"Any undergraduate that is interested in the graduate program and that is considering for applying to graduate school for next fall should attend."

To give K-State's undergraduate students and students from other universities in the region an opportunity to learn about graduate programs at K-State, a planning committee from the K-State Graduate School, supported by representatives from each of the colleges from the STEM fields, will be host to this year's graduate fair at K-State.

The colleges of Agriculture, Arts and Sciences, and Engineering are involved in providing an overview of graduate education, graduate assistantship and other financial support, resources available, and community information.

"This way, students have an opportunity to interact with graduate students, faculty and staff to learn more about the requirements for graduate school," Shanklin said.

Shanklin said this fair is important because it will inform students of requirements for tuition and opportunities for assistantship to help fund their graduate education and will allow them to interact with graduate students to learn what it really means to be a graduate student.

The graduate fair begins tonight with a tour of campus. Later, there will be various activities for students and faculty to interact, Shanklin said.

Several programs, with staffing planned according to interest and the number of registered students, will take place throughout Saturday.

"There will be a panel of six graduate students who talk about what it is like to be a graduate student, why they chose to come to K-State for their graduate school, and what the responsibilities of graduate teaching and graduate research assistants are," Shanklin said.

"They will be also talking about activities beyond the academic field that took place in the Manhattan area and that they participated in."

Students will hear current students' advice about applying and succeeding in graduate school. Additionally, people will talk about financial aid for graduate school.

After the panel, students will proceed to the program they selected when registering to learn more about the specific research and requirements of the program in which they are interested.

"They will also learn about research opportunities within the department," Shanklin said.

"They get to interact with graduate students and hear what it's like to work in that specific program."

The different graduate programs will have information tables available during breakfast and lunch. Students who are interested in more than one program can look through all programs' information.

The fair will conclude with another tour of the K-State campus for those who missed the Friday tour.

Thirty-eight students from 22 different universities have registered to participate. Students from several other Big 12 Conference universities, as well as regional schools, will attend.

Although students who didn't register still can participate in the graduate fair, Shanklin said it is necessary to sign up in advance so the Graduate School can supply enough information material, offer a variety of programs and provide enough staff and professors.

"We have to plan for the meals, events and the information packets that will be distributed," she said.

Further information about the 2006 STEM Graduate Fair is available on its Web site (www.k-state.edu/grad/gspeopleorg/gradfair/index.htm).

Agriculture conference features speakers, sessions for minorities

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 80 students from different colleges will meet today at K-State to focus on academics, scholarship and preparing for the work force.

The Region IV "Innovation, Exploration and Discovery" conference for the national organization Minorities in Agriculture, Natural Resources and Related Sciences, will be at K-State today and Saturday, said Zelia Wiley, adviser for the K-State chapter.

"It's a great opportunity for K-State to be showcased," she said.

Wiley said the conference will feature several speakers who are national officers for the organization, as well as the keynote speaker, Fred Cholic, dean of the College of Agriculture.

Undergraduates, graduates and professionals will attend different sessions and interactive hands-on workshops.

There also will be a tour of the new flour mill to showcase the facility because K-State has the only grain science and industry department in the nation, Wiley said.

She said the conference is open to all K-State students and will continue through Saturday.

Conference attendees will participate in social activities in the K-State Student Union, including bowling and Union Program Council's After Hours.

Daysha Jefferson, senior in food science, is the president of K-State's chapter and will attend the conference.

"It's amazing on leadership, because it's supposed to prepare us for the annual conference in March," Jefferson said.

"It kind of updates us for everything."

Career and Employment

Services will offer a workshop on résumés to help prepare the students to meet the corporations that are at the conference, she said.

Jefferson said the conference will demonstrate and publicize K-State's agriculture program to diverse groups of people.

"Not a lot of people know about ag at K-State, as far as minorities are considered," she said. "We're low in numbers."

Students who are College of Agriculture ambassadors and members of multicultural student organizations will help with the conference.

Brandon Clark, graduate assistant for the Multicultural Student Office, said some of the students in multicultural organizations will shuttle students to and from event activities and help with registration.

"Our main goal is to show them some good K-State hospitality," Clark said.

Roberts loses chairmanship Democrats take over Congress' key positions

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The midterm elections Nov. 7 meant a shift in the political makeup of Congress, as Democrats came into the majority for the first time since 1994.

Democrats now will chair all Congressional committees and head both legislative bodies when Congress reconvenes in January.

House Democrats chose Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., as the first-ever female speaker of the House when they met Thursday. Pelosi's position puts her third in the order of presidential succession.

The party ignored Pelosi's choice for majority leader, Jack Murtha, D-Pa., a strong anti-war proponent, opting instead for Rep. Steny Hoyer, D-Md., a 25-year veteran of Congress, by a vote of 149-86, according to an Associated Press article.

In the Senate, Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., was named majority leader Tuesday. Reid chose Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., as assistant majority leader.

Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., will lose his post as Senate Intelligence Committee chair. Roberts, a K-State alumnus, has held the position since before the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks and since has seen the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq while in office. The Intelligence Committee chair became a key post in a time of terrorism and concerns over domestic security.

The senator endured scrutiny from critics and fellow politicians who have criticized the committee for its lack of preparation for such events and lack of knowledge on issues like weapons of mass destruction, according to an article in the Lawrence Journal-World.

When Senate Democrats caucus next Tuesday to formally choose Roberts' successor, the likely choice will be committee vice-chair Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va.

The 69-year-old Rockefeller is known for attacking Republicans on domestic issues and their treatment of workers and the poor, according to the AP.

Rockefeller and Roberts issued a report that criticized pre-war intelligence from the CIA and other agencies, but the two have polar opinions on the White House's treatment of pre-war intelligence, according to the AP.

The best advice for driving in bad winter weather is to not drive at all, if you can avoid it.

Don't go out until the snow plows and sanding trucks have had a chance to do their work, and always allow extra time.

If you must drive in snowy conditions, make sure your car is prepared and you know how to handle road conditions.

It's helpful to practice winter driving techniques in a snowy, open parking lot, so you're familiar with how your car handles. Consult your owner's manual for tips specific to your vehicle, and follow this advice:

DRIVING IN SNOW, ICE

- Decrease your speed and leave yourself plenty of room to stop. You should allow at least three times more space than usual between you and the car in front of you.
- Brake gently to avoid skidding. If your wheels start to lock up, ease off the brake.
- Turn on your lights to increase your visibility to other motorists.

- Keep your lights and windshield clean.
- Use low gears to keep traction, especially on hills.
- Don't use cruise control or overdrive on icy roads.
- Be especially careful on bridges, overpasses and infrequently traveled roads, which will freeze first.
- Even at temperatures above freezing, if the conditions are wet, you could encounter ice in shady areas or on exposed roadways like bridges.
- Don't pass snow plows and sanding trucks. The drivers have limited visibility, and you're likely to find the road in front of them worse than the road behind.
- Don't assume your vehicle can handle all conditions. Even four-wheel and front-wheel drive vehicles can encounter trouble on winter roads.

If your rear wheels skid:

Take your foot off the accelerator. Steer in the direction you want the front wheels to go. If your rear wheels are sliding left, steer left. If they're sliding right, steer right. If your rear wheels start sliding the other way as you recover, ease the steering wheel toward that side. You might have to steer left and right a few times to get your vehicle completely under control. If you have standard brakes, pump them gently. If you have anti-lock brakes (ABS), do not pump the brakes. Apply steady pressure to the brakes. You will feel the brakes pulse — this is normal.

If your front wheels skid:

Take your foot off the gas and shift to neutral, but don't try to steer immediately. As the wheels skid sideways, they will slow the vehicle, and traction will return. As it does, steer in the direction you want to go. Then put the transmission in "drive" or release the clutch and accelerate gently.

If you get stuck:

- Do not spin your wheels. This will only dig you in deeper.
- Turn your wheels from side to side a few times to push snow out of the way.
- Use a light touch on the gas to ease your car out.
- Use a shovel to clear snow away from the wheels and the underside of the car.
- Pour sand, kitty litter, gravel or salt in the path of the wheels to help gain traction.
- Try rocking the vehicle. (Check your owner's manual first — it can damage the transmission on some vehicles.) Shift from forward to reverse and back again. Each time you're in gear, give a light touch on the gas until the vehicle gets going.

whose efforts predate smoking legislation in Manhattan, has been assisted by a partnership with Buffalo Wild Wings.

"We feel like if they were going to be supportive of us, we were going to continually support their business," she said.

The bulk of funding for the group's expenses comes from Youth As Resources and the Riley County Health Department.

Emily Berry, president of Teens Leading Teens and MHS student, said response to the group had been largely positive.

"I think we get a really awesome response, and it kind of shows people we're willing to do anything to try and make a difference," she said.

Opponents, though, recognize the persuasive influences and emotional appeal of young advocates.

"The power is the kids," said Devin Peifer of Fort Riley.

Getting those too young to vote involved in the issue is a powerful and passionate tool and a welcome reprieve from what many claim is an incurable social apathy.

"You hear so many times that the youth are deteriorating and it's just completely changed my perspective," said Janelle McIlvain, senior in family life and community services and Teens Leading Teens intern.

Warrant leads to arrest

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan man was arrested Wednesday as the result of an ongoing investigation into the distribution of crack cocaine and marijuana in the Manhattan and Riley County area.

James O. Smith III, 814 Leavenworth St., Apt. 2, was arrested after officers from the Riley County Police Department carried out a search warrant and seized 2 1/2 ounces of crack cocaine and 1/2 pound of marijuana. The street value of the drugs was more than $6,400, according to a news release from the RCPD.

Smith was arrested for possession of crack cocaine and marijuana with intent to distribute within 1,000 feet of a school, no Kansas drug tax stamp, unlawful acquisition of drug proceeds and felony possession of drug paraphernalia. Bond was set at $20,000.

According to the release, the investigation is ongoing, and additional arrests are anticipated.

Player to watch

Leon Patton is listed as the No. 1 running back on the depth chart for Saturday's game, but don't be surprised to see a lot of James Johnson. Expect K-State to test Kansas' rush defense, ranked 22nd nationally, early on before going to its aerial attack.

Off the Field

with Antwon Moore

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Antwon Moore is one of five players to transfer to K-State from Northeastern Oklahoma A&M College this year. The sophomore linebacker from Ponca City, Okla., had his best game against Iowa State when he tallied eight of his season total of 20 tackles. Although many people might not know his name, Moore might have the number most recognizable to K-State fans - 43. He recently answered questions about his special bond with the linebacker corp, who has the best nickname on the team and more.

Q. Is there any music you like to listen to before a game?

A. Mainly I like to listen a lot of rap. There is some rap that you probably never heard of. I like to listen to Brother Lynch, some C-Bo, among others. Those are the ones that get me real pumped up.

Q. What was it like having all of those other players come from Northeastern Oklahoma A&M with you?

A. It is real relaxing and comforting. I enjoy having them with me. Whenever I found out all of them were coming with me, I wouldn't have to be so worried about making too many other friends because I already had friends coming with me. It's real nice to know they are with me.

Q. Can you explain the bond that has formed between the linebackers here?

A. The bond that I have with the linebackers is like I have known them all my life. Archer and I joke around all of the time, and Rolo - Justin Roland - is like a brother to me. The rest of them - we all just have fun together.

Q. Who has the best nickname on the team and why?

A: Josh Freeman's is Michael Jackson, because he looks like Michael Jackson.

Q. Do you have any hobbies not usually seen in a football player?

A. Well, I put together older cars. I buy them from the junkyard, fix them up and sell them. My favorite is Chevy. I put together three Monte Carlos, one '78 Monte Carlo and two '79 Monte Carlos. I have got another project. It's a '71 Caprice Classic. It is a convertible, it's black with white leather, and I just do it from the ground up. I do the body work, interior, motor and all that.

Q. What is your favorite football movie?

A. "Remember the Titans." Actually, "Gridiron Gang," the new one that just came out. That is my favorite, because it is based on a true story. Those based on real life are the movies that really interest me.

VS.

OFFENSE

✓ Last weekend's 45-point victory over Texas speaks for itself. Quarterback Josh Freeman is terrorizing defenses, throwing for more than 250 yards in each of the Wildcats' last two games. Additionally, running back Leon Patton is proving he can come through in the clutch with a big run or by completing a pass of his own.

The Kansas offense definitely has been its strong suit this season. Senior running back Jon Cornish leads the Big 12 Conference in rushing this season with 1,130 yards. Additionally, freshman quarterback Kerry Meier had an efficient game in last weekend's 41-10 thrashing of Iowa State.

DEFENSE

✓ Despite the 42 points given up to the Longhorns last week, the K-State defense actually played pretty well. The Longhorns were held below their season average of 407 yards of total offense, and quarterback Jevan Snead was sacked five times. If the Wildcats can get some pressure on the inexperienced Meier, it might be enough to rattle him for the rest of the game.

Fortunately for K-State, Kansas' defense has the same weakness Texas had last weekend - defending against the pass. Kansas ranks last in the Big 12 in pass defense, allowing more than 260 yards per game. The Jayhawk rush defense is significantly better, but it should seem paltry in comparison to the rush defense K-State encountered last weekend against the Longhorns.

SPECIAL TEAMS

✓ Last weekend's win can be attributed largely to some key special teams plays. Yamon Figurs' 52-yard punt return gave K-State much-needed breathing room, and Jeff Snodgrass' 51-yard field goal with 3:19 remaining sealed the game for the Wildcats. If the special teams can come up big again against Kansas, it should be enough to ensure a Wildcat victory.

Much like K-State, Kansas has the luxury of gifted kickoff and punt return men. The Jayhawks are averaging 21 yards per kickoff return and almost 15 yards per punt return. Unfortunately for Kansas, junior kicker Scott Webb has been abysmal lately, converting just one of his last four field-goal attempts. Webb's poor form might spell disaster for the Jayhawks.

PREDICTION

High-scoring shootouts have become a trend for the Wildcats recently. Expect the same this weekend when two motivated teams clash at Memorial Stadium in Lawrence. A win for Kansas assures it bowl eligibility, while a victory for the Wildcats could mean a trip to the Alamo Bowl. Expect coaches and players on both sides to pull out all the stops in this one and give fans a game to remember. Freeman's hot hand continues, and K-State wins a thriller.

K-State program bucks trend, building team on walk-ons raised, taught to play in Kansas

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The story of a walk-on football player is one of an underdog.

Walk-ons work every bit as hard as — if not harder than — scholarship players to be part of the team.

The difference is that they don't receive the same perks. Walk-ons just do what they can to help their team with the hope that one day they will earn a scholarship.

That goal keeps them focused until they are rewarded with one of their team's 85 scholarship spots. Sophomore defensive end Ian Campbell, who received a scholarship after last spring's practices, remembers what it took to earn one of those spots.

"That drive is definitely there," Campbell said.

"It means that much more to you when you get that check every month, and you get your books and tuition paid for."

Although rare at many schools, the story of a walk-on turned scholarship player has become one often told at K-State. Eight former or current walk-ons have made at least one start for the Wildcats this season, including Campbell, junior wide receiver Jordy Nelson, sophomore safety Andrew Erker, senior defensive tackle Blake Seiler, junior linebacker Marcus Perry, junior offensive lineman Jacob Voegeli, senior tight end Donald Raymer and junior wide receiver Daniel Gonzalez.

In comparison, most of the other universities in the Big 12 Conference have not started nearly as many walk-

Safety Andrew Erker, a walk-on from Olathe, Kan., has received plenty of playing time this season with the loss of starting safety Marcus Watts. Erker has started in six games for K-State this year and has 30 tackles.

ons as K-State has this year. Colorado comes closest with six former or current walk-ons all making starts on its offense, which ranks at the bottom of the conference in scoring and total yards.

Some walk-ons might never earn a scholarship, despite making it onto the field. Voegeli, who made three starts last year and one start this year, still carries walk-on status, but he said making the starting line-up is the biggest reward.

"It's nice being on the team and being able to run out with the team, but it's even better going on the field and playing," Voegeli said.

All eight of the current or former walk-ons who made starts for K-State this season are from Kansas, a place not typically known for producing high-profile athletes like Texas is.

According to Rivals.com's class of 2007 football rankings, Kansas' top two players are rated as four-star prospects.

However, Texas is home to five five-star recruits and 15 four-star players.

"It's kind of hard being from Kansas to get looked at by schools," Seiler said. "Some of the guys from around here just aren't fully developed in high school."

Brian Gates, a Rivals.com recruiting editor, said one reason players like Campbell and Nelson are not offered scholarships out of high school is because Kansas players do not get as much training as players from other states.

According to the Kansas State High School Activities Association's 2006 handbook, coaches are only allowed to schedule practice between the opening and ending of the regular season. A coach also is allowed one non-contact voluntary camp during the summer.

The manual for Texas high school football, set by the University Interscholastic League, allows teams to use a 60-minute class period during the off-season to practice. Coaches in class 4A or 5A can schedule 18 spring practices within a 30-day period.

"I think Kansas is behind in developing players because of the limitations put on by state rules," Gates said. "With other players getting extra training, it may take a year or two for a Kansas player to catch up."

Over the years, several Kansas walk-ons have written their own success stories at K-State, but perhaps none were as successful as Manhattan native Jon McGraw, who played for the Wildcats in 1997-2001. McGraw went from walk-on to starter to All-Big 12 honors and now plays defensive back for the Detroit Lions.

Raymer said it was stories like McGraw's that drew him to K-State.

"When I came up here, people told me to just keep working hard because other walk-ons were successful,

The Cat Cruiser File

■ Owners: Dan and Chris Mumma of Dighton, Kan.
 ■ Year/Model: Short school bus
 ■ Color: purple and silver
 ■ Bought in: 2003
 ■ Miles: Unknown, because the odometer doesn't work
 ■ Features: Bench seating along the two sides, extra batteries to allow for the use of a microwave and multiple Crock-Pots, silver and purple exterior emblazoned with the names of all the bowl games to which it has traveled in each of the windows. The walls and ceiling inside are covered with the signatures of various guests of the tailgate, including former coach Bill Snyder.
 ■ Cost: $500, though Dan Mumma's sister, Vickie James, said she estimates he has spent more than twice that on modifications.
 ■ Road trips: The Mumma family hasn't taken the Cruiser anywhere other than Manhattan, but James said the previous owners took it to several bowl games, including the 1997 Fiesta Bowl in Phoenix and the 1998 Alamo Bowl in San Antonio, Texas.

The Cat Cruiser has a history of supporting K-State football. Before the former school bus was bought by the Mummas in 2003, it traveled to almost every bowl game in which K-State participated, James said.

James said the bus hasn't traveled to any away games since then, but for every home game, it makes the four-hour trip from Dighton to the west parking lot of Snyder Family Stadium.

"It's a great way to get a lot of people together who don't normally see each other really any other time of the year except for football season," James said. "We probably average 25-50 people per tailgate."

James said the family has welcomed countless visitors to the tailgate who are curious about the silver school bus, and family members always have guests sign the inside of the bus before leaving.

"It's not pretty, it's not fancy, but we've served (all sorts) of people," James said. "It's just fun."

Bitter rivalry

K-State can keep Mark Mangino, Kansas out of bowl contention

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

You don't have to worry about K-State defensive end Ian Campbell getting ready for this week's Sunflower Showdown against Kansas.

Campbell is one of the many players on K-State's roster from the state of Kansas (he's from Cimarron), and he said he'll have no trouble avoiding a letdown after last week's stunning 45-42 upset of Texas.

"I've never been a KU fan," Campbell said. "I can say that. That's as far as I'll get into that detail."

"I can't say I haven't cheered for them in basketball from time to time, because you want your conference to do better and look good, but I definitely don't have any KU pride - just K-State pride."

Senior tight end Donald Raymer, a native of Goodland, Kan., has to worry about bragging rights every time he goes back home for the holidays.

Raymer's former high school basketball coach is a huge Kansas fan and makes sure to rub it in Raymer's face if the Jayhawks come out on top in football.

"I just like to go home on vacations and be like, 'Hey, what was the score of that game?'" Raymer said. "A couple years ago, he got to laugh over the holidays when I went home, and I don't want to have that ever happen again."

For years, the Sunflower State rivalry wasn't much of a showdown. The Wildcats dominated during the Bill Snyder era, winning 11 in a row until the Jayhawks won 31-28 in Lawrence in 2004.

Now the bad blood is back, and the games have more implications than ever.

KU enters this year's contest with a 5-5 record, meaning the team needs one more win to become bowl-eligible for the second year in a row - a feat the program never has accomplished.

Ironically, the Jayhawks' final two games are against their two most-hated rivals - K-State and Missouri. KU closes out the season by going to Columbia, Mo., to face the Tigers on Nov. 25.

K-State has its bowl bid all but sealed up, and the possibility of keeping Kansas from going to a bowl is something senior defensive tackle Quintin Echols wants to take advantage of.

"You just want to play spoiler," Echols said. "The last few years, we were in a position where we needed one or two wins to get to a bowl game. We know how bad that feels, so we want to make somebody else feel that bad."

Growing up in Leawood, Kan., a suburb of the greater Kansas City area, senior kicker Jeff Snodgrass became familiar with this rivalry.

His father attended and coached at K-State, but his mother went to medical school at KU. The "rift," as Snodgrass calls it, is so evident the family has stones with both logos on them in their front yard.

Most of Snodgrass' friends at Rockhurst High School were Jayhawk fans and now attend Kansas, so the kicker will have a lot of friends and family watching him in Lawrence.

Kansas is favored to beat K-State, but that doesn't matter to Campbell.

"If KU's the favorite, whatever," Campbell said. "We've been picked to lose before. I don't care. I know what's going to happen when we go to KU, and I'm not worried about it. We'll just let the scoreboard tell the tale."

Copy chief learns about West Coast offense, quarterback styles

Confession: I'm not really a football fan.

However, after reading 10 Gameday sections cover to cover, I'm at least twice the fan I was in August.

Understanding the game is crucial to enjoying it, and this semester has been my period of football enlightenment, thanks to the Collegian sports staff. Here are some of my "Aha!" moments:

1. Who knew there was a difference between punter Tim Reyer and kicker Jeff Snodgrass' jobs? They both seem to do the same thing: apply a foot to the ball to send it sailing.

2. The Cover-2 defense calls for the Wildcat backfield to be split into five sections, with two players even further back.

I'm still not sure how this helps or hurts, but our defense has been highly praised this season.

3. The West Coast offense coach Ron Prince brought to K-State is the same offense Nebraska runs, but it's a bit more successful for the Huskers, as they beat K-State 21-3 on Oct. 13.

4. When a quarterback is labeled "dual-threat," it means he can throw and run the ball, like Tennessee Titan Vince Young. However, a "pro-style" quarterback is like Josh Freeman - he's mainly a thrower.

5. Apparently, it is possible to learn to play Division-IA football with Madden NFL video games, à la defensive end Moses Manu.

These are obvious, common sense bits of information to your average football fan, but I am not your average football fan.

Until this season, I knew probably as much about badminton as I did about football. Now, however, I can appreciate football for the thought- and finesse-requiring sport it is.

Before, it was an uninteresting sport I was forced to watch every fall and then again sometime in January, praising God the season finally ended. The games were too long, and the action wasn't as intense or as swift as basketball.

Now, I can comment semi-intelligently on a game I watched all the way through. I know at least a little about many of K-State's top players - like the fact that defensive tackle Quintin Echols has a daughter or that safety Marcus Watts is "simply irreplaceable."

And I have to admit, I felt almost naked - despite my five layers of clothing - at last Saturday's game against Texas, because I hadn't copy edited the Gameday section that week.

I didn't know Longhorn quarterback Colt McCoy's style or statistics, not that either mattered, because McCoy was injured right off the bat. I didn't know our "keys to victory," but clearly the team did. And I didn't know the story behind Texas coach Mack Brown's long struggle to earn the backing of Texas fans.

It's amazing how a little knowledge of how a sport works can greatly enhance your enjoyment of it. Now that I know there is more to this rough-and-tumble game than trying to run the ball toward the end of the field while avoiding a dog pile of guys who weigh more than 200 pounds, I find myself - quite strangely - drawn to it.

Jon Cornish's 113-yard average per game is tops in the Big 12 Conference. This season, Cornish has 1,130 yards rushing, 176 yards receiving and six touchdowns.

Hard-running Cornish to pose problems for K-State on Saturday

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jon Cornish is one of the best running backs in the Big 12 Conference this season.

The senior is the ninth leading rusher in the country, and his 113-yard average per game is tops in the conference.

Cornish has rushed for more than 100 yards in six of the Jayhawks games this season and will look to notch No. 7 — which would put him alone in first place in the conference in 100-yard rushing performances this season — when he lines up against K-State on Saturday.

"I think this running back, No. 29 (Cornish), is terrific," coach Ron Prince said. "He reminds me a lot of Thomas Jones, the University of Virginia running back that is playing for the Chicago Bears. This is a very good team that we are going to face. This team is a big, strong team, and I'm very impressed with them."

This season, Cornish has 1,130 yards rushing and 176 yards receiving, and he has scored six touchdowns. He is second in the conference this season in average all-purpose yards per game with 130.6.

His season highs in both rushing yards and touchdowns came Oct. 21 in a 36-35 loss to Baylor when he rushed for 196 yards and two touchdowns.

"He's surprisingly fast. You see him, and you probably don't think he has much speed, but from what I've seen, he's faster than what you might think," senior defensive lineman Quintin Echols said. "He's a hard runner. Of course, he probably has a few moves, but I think he prides himself on running hard."

Cornish is part of a Kansas offense that is eighth in the Big 12, averaging 29.2 points per game. The Jayhawks average 381.2 yards of total offense per game, which includes 171 yards rushing and 210.2 yards passing. All of these averages are ranked seventh in the conference.

"(Beating Texas) was awesome, but we've got to move on," quarterback Josh Freeman said. "Kansas is a good team, and they've hung in with a lot of good teams this year. We know that they're going to play us tight, so we just have to get ready."

Collegian didn't give KSDB a challenge

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was a good idea until about the fourth week into the season.

That's when KSDB 91.9 went on an unprecedented run led by sports editor Kyle Finley to put an end to the picks competition.

When I met Finley to first discuss the Collegian sports staff taking on the KSDB 91.9 sports staff in a weekly battle of the sports superior, never did I think we would be losing by such a large margin come the end of the season.

Maybe it is my fault for my selection of people to represent the Collegian, or maybe, just maybe, we should not have taken our mantra from football coach Ron Prince and taken the "bold and daring" picks, only to have them backfire time after time.

Unfortunately, the season has ended, and the Collegian must concede victory to 91.9.

It was fun while it lasted, but, like most losing teams say, "Wait 'til next year."

Offensive line builds depth, confidence

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After weeks of different line-ups and disappointing results, the carousel of different offensive linemen has started to please coach Ron Prince.

Throughout the season Prince said he expects much out of the offensive line. Although the line has not yet met his expectations, Prince said it is developing into a better unit.

"I think they are getting closer," Prince said. "I think we're starting to see accumulated depth and starting to see evidence of coaching, so I am very pleased about that."

The players know they are not meeting Prince's expectations and they could be taken from or moved into a starting role any week. This has produced two of the most important components of an offensive line - competition and depth.

"As far as developing depth, the guys that have started and aren't now are always willing to help out," junior guard Logan Robinson said. "It's a whole collective thing of helping everyone out."

Prince has started seven combinations of linemen, with 11 different starters overall.

Senior Greg Wafford is the only lineman to start every game, but even he hasn't remained at the same position. Wafford started the first four games at guard and then switched to tackle.

Wafford is not the only player to play at different positions along the line. Michael Frieson

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

The offensive line has allowed only seven sacks in the last three games. In losses to Missouri and Nebraska earlier this season, quarterback Josh Freeman was sacked eight times in both games combined.

and Nick Stringer both have started at right and left tackle, and John Hafferty and Brad Rooker have practiced at several positions on the line.

"It's really helped a lot being able to know different positions," Robinson said. "It also helped being able to do more for the team."

The line is beginning to mesh at seemingly the right time. Last week against Texas, the line protected Freeman and allowed only one sack to one of the nation's best defensive fronts.

"I think we're finally starting to mesh a little more at the offensive line position," Robinson said.

5 Keys to Victory

K-State must listen to coordinator Franklin to avoid letdown against KU

By Austin Meek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Texas win is ancient history as far as the Wildcats are concerned. They now turn their attention east, to a Kansas team fighting for bowl eligibility. Here's what K-State must do to claim bragging rights in the Sunflower Showdown and deliver a blow to Kansas' postseason aspirations.

1. NO TEXAS LETDOWN

Given the opponent, K-State probably won't overlook this game. Still, the Wildcats can't come out flat or overconfident against a Kansas team playing for bowl eligibility.

2. STAY GROUNDED

K-State should be able to throw against the Jayhawks, who rank 117th in the nation against the pass. Still, the Wildcats can't abandon the run - this offense is at its best when running backs James Johnson and Leon Patton get plenty of touches.

3. THE FULL NELSON

If Yamon Figurs can't play, K-State will need a big game from junior wide receiver Jordy Nelson. Nelson and quarterback Josh Freeman are still perfecting their chemistry, but the Riley County product delivers big catches when the Wildcats need them most. He'll need a few on Saturday.

4. SLOW DOWN THE CANADIAN COMET

Kansas running back Jon Cornish, a native of New Westminster, British Columbia, leads the Big 12 Conference in rushing. With Kansas' quarterback situation uncertain, Cornish will get the ball early and often on Saturday.

5. TAP THE FRANKLIN MINT

Offensive coordinator James Franklin's play calling has been marvelous during K-State's three-game winning streak. He's been able to mix the run and the pass, finding the right play at the right time to get K-State into the end zone. If Franklin calls another good game, K-State should put up plenty of points against Kansas' mediocre defense.

1 killed in Cattracker accident

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A man critically injured in Saturday's Cattracker accident in Lawrence has been identified, while the name of the man killed in the accident has not yet been released.

The Salina Journal reported Sunday that Chris Orr, Salina resident and former sports writer for the Journal, is the man injured in Saturday's accident.

At about 11:35 a.m. Saturday, Lawrence police were dispatched to a vehicle fatality accident at the 1700 block of Iowa Street, according to a Lawrence Police Department press release.

The accident occurred less than 2 miles from the University of Kansas' Memorial Stadium, where K-State was preparing to play its in-state rival.

Bob Pottroff, owner of the Cattracker, said passengers on the bus had gone to the balcony on top of the bus without the driver's knowledge. To protect the driver's privacy, his name has not been released.

Pottroff, Manhattan resident, said he was not present at the accident.

"I can't explain how badly the driver feels. He didn't know anybody had gone up on top of the bus. He's destroyed right now," Pottroff said.

As it is a well-known symbol of K-State, delivering spirited Wildcat pride across the nation, the effects of the Cattracker accident have reached far and wide, Pottroff said.

PS3 release triggers frenzy, violence

By Megan Moser

The lure of a 60-GB hard drive, wireless controllers and chrome trim drove hardcore gamers to camp outside stores for as long as three days in anticipation of the release of the coveted Sony PlayStation 3 Friday.

The video game system costs $500 to $600, depending on the size of the hard drive and extras like controllers, but some people were willing to pay much more.

Shane Eslit, junior in secondary education, made $1,200 just for selling his spot in line.

He said he and his girlfriend planned to camp out in front of a store Thursday evening for fun. They went to Best Buy and saw there were a lot of people in line, then went to Target, where there were only nine people waiting.

Eslit said he decided to leave, but some other people camping out convinced him to stay until morning for a chance at one of the six PS3s Target had.

"I was 10th in line," he said. "Six, seven and eight were in a group, and they decided to leave. The guy who was ninth was asleep, so the sixth guy offered to sell me his spot."

Later, Eslit said, the man who was asleep offered to buy Eslit's spot, putting him sixth in line. Eslit said the man

Students celebrate Thanksgiving in dining centers, with friends' families or not at all

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For the Thanksgiving holiday, many will travel home to sit down with family and eat a traditional Thanksgiving meal. However, some observe the holiday in other ways.

AN OBSERVATION, BUT NO CELEBRATION

Lenka Hadamova did not grow up celebrating Thanksgiving. The only thing to which she said she could compare the traditional American dinner is a classic Christmas dinner, when her family gathers together to eat fried carp and potato salad.

However, when Hadamova came to the United States from Moravia, Czech Republic, in 2003, she experienced her first Thanksgiving dinner, but she described it as a religious experience.

Hadamova, graduate student in education and English as a Second Language, said she and her husband were invited to a Thanksgiving dinner, but they did not realize it was at a church.

"The first experience was praying before the dinner, which was quite weird to me," she said. "You don't want to offend anybody, because it is a big thing, and you don't know what to do."

She said the experience was strange, because there are a lot of atheists in the Czech Republic, and people are not raised learning or talking about religion, including her mother, who opposed religion and church.

Hadamova said the meal consisted of turkey, mashed potatoes and sweet potatoes.

"(It was) quite weird, because we don't have them," she said. "It was just a lot of food."

During the meal, Hadamova said she heard people talking about church and thinking in the perspective of community.

"I think I was really pleased with the community system," she said. "You have a lot of people that you don't know anything about, but you can be with them around the table."

However, after her first Thanksgiving, Hadamova and her husband decided to spend the next holidays traveling instead of celebrating. She said the day seemed more like a day off from work.

"If you do not have the tradition, one year is enough to observe," she said.

This Thanksgiving Hadamova and her husband will travel again. They are visiting a friend in Chicago who is married to an American, and they will eat a Thanksgiving dinner. Hadamova said the dinner will include a prayer before the meal.

"As long as nobody makes me feel weird about it, I'm fine," she said.

Hadamova said she does not plan to celebrate Thanksgiving every year. To her, it seems like there are a lot of holidays similar to Christmas in the United States.

"Don't ask me how I'm going to explain to my children someday why we don't celebrate Thanksgiving," she said. "I don't know how you could celebrate it without growing up with it."

Thanksgiving meal can be enjoyed in moderation

By Emily Haug
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thanksgiving – the holiday filled with food, family, football and more food. Overeating during the holidays has become just as much a tradition as the annual football game, drawing more attention to the obesity epidemic facing the United States.

Concerns about obesity have risen the past years. About 127 million Americans are overweight, and more than 60 million are obese, according to the American Obesity Association.

One factor that has attributed to the increase is overeating.

"People overeat for a number of reasons," said Dianna Schalles, nutritionist at Lafene Health Center. "The constant exposure to food in our culture: the vast array of foods to choose from, the fast food convenience factor, marketing dollars aimed towards our appetites, and last but not least, we eat for emotional reasons that don't have anything to do with physical survival."

Aside from weight gain, overeating can lead to long-term problems like diabetes, hypertension, heart disease and some forms of cancer.

"Obesity is a serious problem," Isaac Specht, sophomore in political science, said. "My grandmother has diabetes and went into congestive heart failure earlier this year because of her obesity. I've seen what obesity can do to a person, so I know just how much of a problem it is."

During the holidays, many people are compelled to eat more food because of stress, emotions and other personal factors, but there are ways to have a healthy Thanksgiving.

Schalles said a well-portioned Thanksgiving meal includes 3-4 ounces of turkey, 1/2 cup of potatoes, 1/2 cup of stuffing, 1/4 cup of gravy, 1/2 cup of green beans and one slice of pumpkin pie equivalent to a slice of pizza. After the meal, people should take a walk to burn excess calories.

While the Thanksgiving meal often is large, Maureen Ty, sophomore in microbiology, said she is not worried about her holiday caloric intake.

"It's a family tradition to eat a lot. If you don't eat, you are not a part of the family," Ty said.

Schalles said she encourages people to enjoy the holiday food, while stopping when they've had enough.

"Don't rob yourself of holiday traditions," she said. "If you drool over the turkey and trimmings but deny yourself the chance to enjoy in moderation, you'll likely set yourself up for a binge later."

U. ALABAMA BANS CLASSIC GAMEDAY SONG

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Many University of Alabama students said they have felt a void recently in their game-day experience at Bryant-Denny Stadium, a void once filled with the Green Day song "Basket Case."

Athletic department officials prohibited the Million Dollar Band from playing the song between the third and fourth quarters of football games, the band's tradition for at least five years.

In its place, fans now hear "Sweet Home Alabama."

U. MARYLAND STUDENTS ADMIT ONLINE OBSESSION

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Paul Zwiers, graduate student in biology, said some days he spends eight or 10 hours coddling up to his Apple laptop.

"Sometimes it's all day," Zwiers said. But he was quick to explain the hours he spends online are a necessity — often filled by writing papers and reading e-mails instead of playing games or surfing social networking sites.

But university counseling center Assistant Director Jonathan Kandell said it could be that Zwiers is one of as many as 10 percent of students who are addicted to the Internet — a trend that has emerged in the last decade with the ubiquity of personal computers.

U. FLORIDA ALUMNUS' WEB SITE RAISES FUNDS

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — A cat named Sampson underwent a life-altering surgery, thanks to his owner's Web design talent and the kindness of strangers.

University of Florida graduate Jonathan Reus, a multimedia engineer at Shands, solicited donations through a Web site he designed to raise money for his cat's operations. Combined with revenue from a benefit concert, the effort helped cover the cost of Sampson's risky $2,300 surgery.

In February 2006, Sampson began repeatedly urinating outside his litter box. When Sampson stopped eating, Reus got worried and took him to a veterinarian. The vet told Reus Sampson had a deposit that was blocking his urethra and needed emergency surgery or he would die within hours.

Marching band closes season with compiled show

By Jesse Sachdeva
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State marching band performed a compilation of all of its shows from this year as part of the annual end-of-season performance Sunday afternoon in Ahearn Field House.

"This performance provides a good chance for Mom and Dad and other family members to come down and see these kids perform," Frank Tracz, director of bands, said. "It also gives us a chance to recognize all the effort our members put in."

Dressed in white T-shirts and purple windpants, the usually animated band members were seated throughout the performance, but by no means did they remain still as they danced in their seats.

The band opened the show with its traditional pre-game set before moving into a set dedicated to the 1st Infantry Division based in Fort Riley.

The band's next set captured the big-band sound of late band director Maynard Ferguson with featured solos on trombone and trumpet and an almost tribal rhythm from the drum line.

The concert continued with the band's video-game-themed set from its All-University Homecoming performance, featuring the theme songs from Super Mario Brothers and The Legend of Zelda.

Throughout the band's performance, the color guard, the baton twirlers and the Classy Cats performed their accompanying routines.

"Thanks to the color guard, twirlers, and the Classy Cats for remembering all those complicated movements and coming back on a Sunday afternoon after the season's over," Tracz said.

"I could tell they were thinking 'Whoa, slow down,' at some points, but you kept together very well, ladies."

After performances of music from the movie "The Incredibles" and the band Chicago, the marching band paused to honor its graduating members, many of whom were active with the band for five years or more.

Next up for the band is preparation for K-State's undetermined bowl game.

"What we do for the bowl depends on which one we end up going to," Tracz said. "Once we know how much time we'll have to prepare, where we'll be going, we'll be able to work from there."

Brian Stuckenschmidt, junior in music education and assistant section leader of the trumpets, said he was a senior in high school the last time K-State qualified for a bowl game, and he is excited to attend the game this year.

"I think the experiences I've had with band are definitely worth the time commitment," Stuckenschmidt said. "The free bowl trip this year will definitely be an added bonus."

Stuckenschmidt said the band practices for two hours every Tuesday and Thursday. Practices will continue for the rest of the semester in preparation for the bowl game.

"I think the band did very well today," Sydney Sample-ton, junior in public relations, said. "They're often underestimated."

"The acoustics here were a lot better than at the stadium. At the games the focus is usually on football, but today the band got to be the center of attention."

Drum Major Brian Long, senior in mechanical engineering, signals to the K-State marching band to end a song at the band's concert Sunday afternoon at Ahearn Field House.

TO THE POINT Watch what you eat, but don't despair

'Tis the season for overeating. But it doesn't always have to be that way during the holidays. Students still can enjoy the November, December and January festivities, but in a healthy way. You don't always need seconds of the entire cornucopia of Thanksgiving food offerings, because each of those items will reappear on the buffet next year. Mashed potatoes and pumpkin pie are not going out of style.

A touch of exercise and portion control eating with a little willpower will curb the effects of consuming too much, whether it's at Thanksgiving dinner or a holiday hors d'oeuvres party.

However, if you do go overboard on the stuffing Thursday, don't fret. It's one day, one meal, and you won't swell to the size of the Charlie Brown balloon in the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade.

Yes, overeating does contribute to the United States' obesity epidemic, but one day of indulging probably won't pack 10 pounds on your frame.

Take a walk with the family or choose teams for a friendly game of flag football after the Kansas City Chiefs play the Denver Broncos Thursday for some physical exertion, and return to your normal, hopefully healthy diet and exercise routine on Friday.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Thanksgiving is upon us once again, and with it, the commencement of the Christmas shopping season. "Black Friday," as the day after Turkey Day is so dramatically called, usually is celebrated by over-zealous consumers waking up at ungodly hours to purchase unnecessary items at lower prices.

This budget-stretching time of year has become largely commercialized.

Stores take the opportunity to make money. Customers take the opportunity to suck the care and thoughtfulness out of gift-giving.

For stores, profiteering during the holiday season is a science. The first step of their method is to begin the Christmas season months early.

This has been noted by many a shopper, but has anyone discovered what benefit this brings for the merchant?

According to MSNBC.com, the purpose of this trend is to encourage customers to pay full price for items. If customers see an item, they will, theoretically, buy it immediately for fear that it will be gone later in the season.

Manufacturers have tricks up their own sleeves. One of these is the tendency to take one existing product, revamp it slightly and market it as the new "must-have." The video-game industry is a prime example. The newly released Sony PlayStation 3 soon will make its predecessors completely obsolete, leaving little recourse to the owners of the machines but to purchase the new unit.

Also, it seems Fisher Price has created the TMX Elmo. It's just like the Tickle Me Elmo of years past, but more "X-treme." Sure, one can be content with an Elmo that laughs and shakes upon having his stomach squeezed, but why not replace it with an Elmo that rolls on the floor laughing upon having his stomach squeezed? Kudos to Mattel for continuing to coast on this 10-year-old fad.

Here's hoping the novelty hasn't worn off for everyone.

Consumers, always on the lookout for the newest and edgiest items, fall prey to all of it. Parents go to outlandish lengths to obtain the perfect gifts for their children.

As a result of this indulgence, children's sense of entitlement is rising. According to People magazine, upon the release of Tickle Me Elmo in 1996, the low supply inflated prices, and the products, usually $30-$40, fetched as much as $1,500.

The suggested age group for the TMX Elmo is 18 months to 5 years old. Apparently, when deciding between shelling out $1,500 or catching hell from their 18-month-old, parents took the former as the more reasonable option.

Finally, the concept of giving someone a meaningful gift to demonstrate thoughtfulness has become a burden. It is a to-do list to be accomplished in order to meet social norms. Rather than taking inherent delight in generosity, many people find only grief and tension in the process of searching for gifts and spending money, and they are merely relieved when it is all over. However, everyone must be acknowledged in the form of material goods, from co-workers to children, hairdressers to neighbors.

While some use the holiday season to relax and enjoy what they have, others use it to place monetary value on relationships and levels of caring. Companies try to turn a profit through whatever means necessary. Though from different viewpoints, today when the word "Christmas" comes to mind, for many, the word that follows is "money."

There are many things in this world that aren't particularly pleasant, like AK-47s, needles and vicious dogs. But one thing, which millions of people spend as much as $1,500 on a year, is something that is quite unpleasant and just as dangerous as an attacking dog or machine gun.

Although it might not cause a fast death, it can be responsible for a rather slow and painful one marked by cancer, enduring pain, chronic illness and the slow deterioration of organs.

But what makes this thing so excruciating is that it is addictive.

Why would anyone spend hundreds of dollars on something that contains a popular ingredient for hair removal or pieces of fiberglass?

This is something that is hard to understand, being that this "thing" is probably the most popular vice in the world. Tobacco should come to mind now. When I see my father or a classmate spitting out a stream of tobacco, it makes me wonder why it is so alluring. What is so great about having to interrupt work, class or time with friends and family in order to slip outside and smoke a cigarette or to place a chunk of tobacco in your lip?

What is so great about having yellow teeth and dried-out skin? The smell, the taste and the very idea of smoking is what makes it so unattractive.

Think of the action of smoking a cigarette in the literal sense: you place a mashed-up plant rolled in paper, with other added chemicals, between your lips and light it on fire.

Or you place a wet, mashed-up plant laced with fiberglass that makes little cuts in your lip to move its ingredients into the bloodstream faster (for the high and for a higher addiction level), into your bottom lip and slowly spit it out into an open cup or on the ground as it gets stuck in between your teeth.

Now think about how stupid the advertisements are that attempt to promote these habits and actions as sexy, masculine or cool.

I guarantee you many people's ideas of sexy and masculine do not include spitting repeatedly into a cup or huffing away on little sticks with an off-putting smell that attaches itself to the breath, skin and clothes of the smoker.

This effect is another consequence of forcing others in the area to experience the delightful smoky atmosphere.

The sight of the spit cup is another issue in itself.

No one, especially children and others forced to be in the situation, should have to breathe secondhand smoke or worry about knocking over the disgusting cup of spit.

The issue of tobacco, ultimately, comes down to the choices individuals make.

However, it is unfair to force other people, especially children, to deal with secondhand smoke when the user is unwilling to accommodate those who dislike it by going outside or not using it in their presence.

'Bring in the Greeks' 2-day event assists seniors, children

By Dustin Sanborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 200 greeks participated in this year's "Bring in the Greeks."

Activities took place Nov. 13 and 14, with all 37 greek houses represented.

"B.I.G. stands for 'Bring in the Greeks' and is basically a huge community service project," said Paul Kauffman, Interfraternity Council director of community and internal relations.

Activities for the week included volunteering at St. Joseph's Senior Village and the Boys and Girls Clubs of Manhattan, raking leaves and organizing a canned food drive. The canned food items were picked up on Friday and given to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"To get ready for the event, we talked to local businesses and organizations to find out what we could do to help them out," Kauffman said. "Then we went to all the greek houses to give out sign-up sheets to fill the time slots."

Many of the participants said they enjoyed helping with the event.

Michelle LeCluyse, junior in biology and member of Alpha Delta Pi, said she enjoyed playing with the children at the Boys and Girls Clubs.

"We got to hear about their lives and what they were doing in school," LeCluyse said. "I think it shows the kids that people really do care."

In addition to assisting the community, B.I.G. also helps participants acquire community service hours, which most houses require.

Clinton Cooper, sophomore in business administration and member of Sigma Nu, volunteered at St. Joseph's Senior Village.

"I assisted in the activity of the day, which happened to be bingo," Cooper said. "We helped the senior citizens read their cards and repeated numbers as well as just making conversation with them. They really seemed to enjoy the company."

Volunteers also helped clean up outside of St. Joseph's.

"I helped clean up flower beds and pull weeds," Austin Roepe, freshman in biology, said.

"It was fun to give back to the community."

'Attack on Lack' grows in 95th year

By Dustin Sanborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Omega Psi Phi fraternity's "Attack on Lack" service week marks 95 years of service since its inception.

"Every year we have a service week for our Founders' Day," said Joel Pearson, graduate student in counseling of student development, "but this year we added more events."

The activities took place last week and included the group's Founders' Day on Friday. Some of the service projects included the Dr. Charles R. Drew Memorial Blood Drive, a coat drive, food sorting at the Flint Hills Breadbasket and Adopt-a-Highway.

"We looked for areas of need in Manhattan and tried to fill those needs," Pearson said.

The coat drive was an extension of the Salvation

Army coat drive. The fraternity wanted to involve more faculty and students in the drive, so members set up a table in the K-State Student Union for collections throughout Founders' Week. Members of the fraternity helped sort cans for the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

"A lot of groups collect cans for the Flint Hills Breadbasket, so we wanted to help in another way," Pearson said. "We found out that the cans need to be sorted after they are brought in."

Adopt-a-Highway is a new event for the fraternity. Members cleaned a 2-mile stretch of Interstate-70 Saturday.

In the Founders' Week blood drive, 25 people donated.

"The purpose of this blood drive was to encourage more minorities to give blood," Pearson said.

Senate passes act to grant millions to Fort Riley

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The U.S. Senate approved the Military Construction and Veterans Affairs Appropriations Act Tuesday that will bring millions of dollars to Fort Riley.

The act was first proposed last May. Sen. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., said he was pulling for its approval in the Senate.

"I am pleased the Senate has acted to improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform, their families and veterans, especially during this time of war when so many are sacrificing their safety for our nation," Roberts said in a release.

The act will give Fort Riley $32 million for a barracks complex, $5.2 million for a child development center, and $10.2 million for a vehicle inspection and cargo processing facility. Deb Skidmore, media relations officer at Fort Riley, said these projects will help Fort Riley.

"We're obviously very excited," Skidmore said. "We can use the help with all the soldiers coming in. Fort Riley is constantly growing."

The fort's growth was the main reason for the large amount of money appropriated for these projects.

"(Fort Riley) does get a lot of money because of the incoming troops," Sarah Little, communications director for Roberts, said. "The post there is going to grow significantly because of Iraq decisions."

Roberts said he was pleased Fort Riley will receive a new vehicle inspection facility.

"This will help speed up critical construction on post while ensuring the safety of those who live and work there," Roberts said.

The act also includes the expansion of healthcare benefits for veterans. According to a news release from the office of Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., the act encourages the Veterans Administration to provide faith-based counseling for victims of post-traumatic stress syndrome. It also calls for an education initiative to inform veterans of the health benefits for which they might be eligible.

The act now will move to a conference committee to iron out the differences between the House and Senate versions. It then will go back to the House and Senate to be passed and then signed by the president.

Breakthrough performer

Joshua Moore — Defensive back

The true freshman stopped a Kansas drive in the second quarter with a nice diving interception in the end zone. It was the first of his career, and he also had five tackles before being carted off the field after a collision with safety Chris Carney in the third quarter.

Turning point

Fourth quarter: Freeman's third interception seals the game.

With all the offensive troubles, the Wildcats trailed 23-13 early in the fourth, but they appeared to be driving for a touchdown. From the Jayhawks' 47-yard line, Josh Freeman tried a screen pass on third-and-6, but the pass was picked off by Kansas defensive back Anthony Webb — his second interception — and returned for a touchdown and a 30-13 lead.

The Kansas defense totaled five sacks and 12 tackles for loss, including five by defensive tackle James McClinton. The consistent pressure on Freeman forced him into several bad decisions, resulting in six turnovers that obviously changed the course of the game.

Game MVP

Jon Cornish proved why he is the Big 12 Conference's leading rusher with 1,331 yards this season. Cornish had no trouble torching the K-State defense for 201 yards and two touchdowns on 25 carries. It was the first time the Wildcats allowed an opponent to top the 200-yard mark since Iowa State's Troy Davis ran for 225 yards in 1996. Cornish scored on runs of 12 and 13 yards, giving the senior seven touchdowns on the season. The final score sealed the win for the Jayhawks.

Analysis

Freeman not only one at fault in loss

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE — It would be easy to place all the blame for K-State's 39-20 loss to Kansas squarely on the shoulders of true freshman quarterback Josh Freeman.

He was responsible for all six of the Wildcats' turnovers, which the Jayhawks converted into 30 points. However, it's not that simple. Freeman needed help to play that badly, and he had plenty.

TEAMMATES

After watching the offensive line's protection in K-State's 45-42 victory over Texas, it was hard to imagine how it could be better. Against Kansas, it definitely was not better.

The Jayhawks' defensive game plan called for a heavy dose of blitzing, which forced Freeman to throw on the run the entire day. Kansas sacked Freeman five times and hurried him five more.

"It's not all on Josh," senior offensive lineman Greg Wafford said. "We still got to give him time and give him the looks to make the plays."

COACHES

Coach Ron Prince was the first one to admit Freeman wasn't the only one to blame for Saturday's loss.

"I did a poor job, not Josh," Prince said. "He's a freshman quarterback who's done unbelievable. So everything he's done for us I consider a real blessing."

KANSAS DEFENSE

Although there were plenty of people from Freeman's own team making life difficult for him, his biggest problem might have been the Jayhawk defense.

While K-State was upsetting Texas last week, Kansas was taking the week off. That extra week of preparation seemed to pay off for the Jayhawks.

"We had a real good game plan on what they tried to do," Kansas cornerback Aqib Talib said. "We were really motivated tonight playing in a rivalry game, and we were just trying to fly around and make plays."

The Jayhawks' passion for the rivalry game, which put them over the top, was similar to the way K-State played in last year's Sunflower Showdown on Oct. 8, 2005. The Wildcats, who won 12-3, recovered six of a total of seven fumbles that day, because they had players who were constantly hustling toward the ball.

Bittersweet ending

Wildcats finish regular season with turnover-ridden loss to Kansas

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

LAWRENCE — On the first play from scrimmage of K-State's 39-20 loss at Memorial Stadium, K-State freshman quarterback Josh Freeman hit tight end Jeron Mastrud over the middle for a 66-yard gain.

The play put the Wildcats inside Kansas' red zone and seemed to put any fears to rest about K-State suffering a letdown after the 45-42 upset against Texas last week.

Mastrud broke free at midfield but did not have the speed to make it to the end zone before being caught by a couple Jayhawk defensive backs.

"I just saw the end zone," Mastrud said. "I thought they were going to tip the ball, so I had to pull it in all the way. I was just trying to get in."

That play would prove to be the perfect summary of the Wildcats' offense in the regular season finale. The Wildcats had no trouble moving the ball — they had 362 yards of total offense — but could manage only one offensive touchdown.

"We moved the ball the whole time on them," Mastrud said. "I was never in doubt of what we could do offensively. We moved it almost every time we had it."

The majority of the problems were caused by K-State's inability to take care of the ball. In the three-game winning streak before the loss to the Jayhawks, the Wildcats turned over the ball three times. On Saturday, Freeman doubled that on his own.

"It was just one of those days," Prince said. "A lot of people around (Freeman) have to play well, and we were a little bit out of sync, a little bit out of rhythm."

"It's my responsibility for how the ball moves. That's the head coach's job. I'm the one that did a poor job, not Josh."

Offensive troubles aside, the K-State defense had problems of its own trying to stop Kansas running back Jon Cornish. Cornish — the Big 12 Conference's leading rusher with 1,331 yards this season — sliced through the Wildcat defense for a career-high 201 yards and two touchdowns.

"Everyone knew what they needed to do, but it just wasn't happening," defensive end Ian Campbell said. "We knew (Cornish) was a good running back going into the game, so that wasn't a surprise."

K-State finished its regular season with a 7-5 overall record, but missed a chance to claim second place in the Big 12 North after Missouri lost to Iowa State. A win would have clinched second in the North, and possibly fourth overall.

"I can't say that it feels good, but we got that bowl game coming up," Campbell said.

MOORE FEELING BETTER

Defensive back Joshua Moore is "in good spirits and resting comfortably" after his collision with teammate Chris Carney during Saturday's loss to Kansas, according to sports information director Garry Bowman.

Moore was retreating on a ball thrown deep to the right side when he hit Carney. He laid on the field for several minutes before being carted off to a standing ovation. Further announcements concerning Moore will be made by Prince at Tuesday's press conference.

Kansas fans might need to prepare for bowl-eligibility letdown

LAWRENCE — The scene following K-State's 39-20 loss to Kansas was similar but definitely not the same as the Wildcats' 45-42 win over No. 4 Texas last weekend.

Ecstatic fans who reeked of alcohol stormed the field. There were plenty of people taking pictures of the final score on the scoreboard. It was the perfect way to capture the Jayhawks' "huge" win.

And then there were the goal posts. The ultimate moment of redemption for any football program is when it finally wins that breakthrough game. The K-State victory must have been extra special, because the Kansas fans honored it by tearing down not one, but both goal posts.

However, the difference between the two games is that it was easy to figure out why K-State's victory over Texas was a big win. The Longhorns were heavily favored and ranked No. 4 in the nation. Plus, there were so many exciting plays in the game, it was re-played the next morning.

Kansas' win over the Wildcats, on the other hand, came up lacking in several areas. K-State wasn't ranked, and the Jayhawks were even slightly favored to win the game. Also, Kansas just beat K-State two years ago.

The only remaining excuse for the excessive celebration is that the win made Kansas bowl-eligible. But bowl eligibility doesn't earn a team anything. They don't make "bowl eligibility" shirts, and they won't be sending the team anywhere for the holiday season simply because it won six games.

And unless Kansas can go on the road this Saturday and beat Missouri, the Jayhawks have a strong chance of being one of those unlucky teams that get nothing for its eligibility. That's because a loss will lock up ninth place in the Big 12 Conference for Kansas. Why does that matter? Because the Big 12 only has eight guaranteed bowl bids.

If the Jayhawks find themselves on the outside looking in, they will have to pray for an at-large bowl bid. That could get tricky, especially since Kansas would be stuck on six wins. For example, the Poinsettia Bowl, which will take an at-large bid this year, will not take any six-win team over any seven-win team, according to Mark Neville, director of communications for the Poinsettia Bowl.

However, there still will be a handful of other bowl games that might need an at-large team. The problem is most bowls probably won't be chomping at the bit to get Kansas. Fan support is so bad for the Jayhawks, they gave away tickets to students for last year's Fort Worth Bowl.

But the Jayhawk fans' celebration does bring up a question. What justifies tearing down the goal posts?

Apparently not much at Kansas.

The goal posts have fallen at least five times in the last three years. Last year, the fans ripped the posts out of the ground for all three of the Jayhawks' Big 12 wins. One of those wins came against Missouri, which Kansas beat for the third year in a row.

This type of thing doesn't happen at other universities. Most fans of teams with any respect at all probably couldn't name five times they tore down their goal posts.

But what can you expect from some of college football's most ridiculous fans?

Magic meets bad comedy

"The Amazing Jonathan: Wrong on Every Level"

TV show review by Matt Sundberg

Are magicians even around anymore? Are they remotely relevant to society?

These are the questions I pondered as I watched Comedy Central's new special, "The Amazing Jonathan: Wrong on Every Level," which aired Saturday night. For those who have never seen him before, the gimmick with Jonathan is that he is a magician/comedian. He performs "magic tricks" while cracking jokes and interacting with the audience. The only problem is his magic sucks — and his jokes aren't good, either.

As a throwback to his last stand-up special, Jonathan introduced his female assistant, Psychic Tanya, early in the show.

Tanya, a ditzy blonde who is quite, um, well-endowed, annoyed me tremendously, stumbling out throughout the show and cracking a few jokes, usually to provide distraction for Jonathan to set up his next trick.

As I quickly learned, when Tanya opens her mouth, her voice is infuriatingly high, and her jokes are even worse than Jonathan's. She came out about halfway through the show with several expensive Blue Man Group tickets, and when Jonathan asked her how she got them, she lowered the tickets and had a ring of blue paint around her mouth. Classy.

Tanya turned out to be worthless, though, because Jonathan chose a volunteer from the audience at the beginning of the show.

Some unfortunate man in his forties named John, who happened to be a doctor, was tapped to be the magician's assistant for the entire show. The poor guy awkwardly stood on the stage next to the magician and was mocked mercilessly the whole show, but he was a good sport. Jonathan even started brutally tickling him once he found out the doctor was ticklish. How many people can say they've been tickled onstage by a Vegas magician?

The jokes in this special are almost too rapid-fire and random to be comprehensible — Jonathan smashes birds into feathers with his bare hands, threatens people at gunpoint, takes $20 bills from people in the audience and rips them up, and hangs dead bunnies by strings.

At one point, Jonathan asked John the assistant whether he ever blew bubbles as a kid. John said yes, and the camera then panned to an evil-looking clown in the audience named Bubbles who seductively waved at the camera.

Creepy. Undoubtedly, the best part of Jonathan's show, and the reason it was worthwhile to watch, was the unscripted banter between the magician and the random assistant he pulled from the audience.

For everything the old guy did and every time he helped set up a magic trick, the Amazing Jonathan had some smart-ass comment to throw back. His jokes might have been cheesy and lame, but the guy definitely has improvisational skills second only to say, Stephen Colbert.

The Amazing Jonathan's comedy is a great example of something people either love or hate; there really is no third option. His jokes are lame, and his magic skills are sketchy at best, but he is tremendously amusing to watch. I definitely like his pissed-off attitude — he reminds me of Lewis Black doing magic.

Besides, any magician who flips off the audience at five-minute intervals is all right with me.

TV's 'Bachelor' to seek women for 10th season at casting call

Staff reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Women looking for a little love in Manhattan just might find it within an hour's drive.

ABC affiliate KTKA in Topeka has announced an open casting call for female contestants on the reality TV series "The Bachelor."

The casting call will take place Nov. 27 at Pigskins Sports Bar in Topeka.

The casting call is 6-8 p.m. Those interested either can pick up an application at the 49 ABC studios or download one from its Web site, www.49abcnews.com.

ABC producers said they are seeking ambitious, charming and successful bachelorettes who are ready to find true love.

Bachelorettes selected will be featured in the show's 10th season of the popular TV series, which introduces one bachelor to 25 eligible women. He then eliminates women from the group until one woman remains — with the choice to establish a relationship beyond the camera crew.

KTKA News contributed to this report.

Cruise, Holmes wed, leave for honeymoon

BRACCIANO, Italy (AP) — Officially, they got married in Los Angeles, but the spectacle of the wedding between Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes was here, in a 15th-century castle that evoked fairy tales and lit up with red, white and green fireworks for a cheering, celebrity-laden crowd.

There were fireworks inside, too, a "never-ending kiss" between the betrothed after they exchanged vows Saturday. The kiss lasted so long it caused guests to shout "stop, stop!" said Giorgio Armani, who attended the wedding and designed the outfits of the bride, the groom and their baby, Suri.

The couple flew out of Rome Sunday for a honeymoon in the Maldives, said Ciampino airport spokesman Adriano Franceschetti. The rest of the wedding party was due to fly to Los Angeles later in the day.

THIS WEEK... A look at events that occurred during this week in history, other bizarre holidays, happenings

TODAY 1859: Dickens completes 'A Tale of Two Cities'

On this day in 1859, Charles Dickens' serialized novel, "A Tale of Two Cities," comes to a close, as the final chapter is published in Dickens' circular, "All the Year Round."

Dickens was born in 1812. His father, a clerk in the Navy pay office, was thrown in debtors' prison in 1824, and 12-year-old Charles was sent to work in a factory. The miserable treatment of children and the institution of the debtors' jail became topics of several of Dickens' novels.

In his late teens, Dickens became a reporter. Among his most important works are "David Copperfield" (1850), "Great Expectations" (1861), and "A Tale of Two Cities" (1859).

TUESDAY 1980: Millions watch to see who shot J.R.

On this day in 1980, 350 million people around the world tuned in to television's popular primetime drama "Dallas" to find out who shot J.R. Ewing, the character fans loved to hate. J.R. had been shot on the season-ending episode the previous March, which now stands as one of television's most famous cliffhangers. The plot twist inspired widespread media coverage and left Americans wondering "Who shot J.R.?"

WEDNESDAY 1906: 'S-O-S' distress signal adopted

"S-O-S" was adopted as a distress signal at the International Radio Telegraphic Convention in Berlin. The signal, however, had been used by the German government for radio regulations in April 1905. In popular usage, SOS became associated with phrases like "Save Our Ship," "Save our Souls," "Survivors On Ship," "Stop Other Signals" and "Save Our Sailors." Today, people have taken SOS beyond a ship distress signal and use it as a way to describe personal stress or trouble, like in Rihanna's "S.O.S."

THURSDAY 1936: Life Magazine publishes new format

On Nov. 23, 1936, the first issue of the pictorial magazine Life is published, featuring a cover photo of the Fort Peck Dam by Margaret Bourke-White.

Life actually had its start earlier in the 20th century as a weekly humor publication, like today's The New Yorker in its use of art cartoons, humorous pieces and cultural reporting. When the original Life folded during the Great Depression, American publisher Henry Luce bought the name and re-launched the magazine as a picture-based periodical on this day in 1936. By this time, Luce already had enjoyed great success as the publisher of Time, a weekly news magazine.

FRIDAY 1932: FBI Crime Lab officially opens

The crime lab that is now referred to as the FBI Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory officially opened in Washington, D.C., on this day in 1932. The lab operated out of a single room and had only one full-time employee, Agent Charles Appel.

Appel began with a borrowed microscope and a pseudo-scientific device called a helixometer. By 1938, the FBI lab added polygraph machines and started conducting controversial lie detection tests as part of its investigations. In its early days, the FBI Crime Lab worked on about 200 pieces of evidence a year. By the 1990s, that number multiplied to about 200,000. Currently, the FBI Crime Lab obtains 600 new pieces of criminal evidence every day.

Chorus performs Christmas songs, organizes auction

By Jesse Sachdeva
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Holiday cheer was in the air at the Houston Street Ballroom Sunday afternoon, as the Wamego Dutch Mill Sweet Adeline Chorus performed a set of Christmas classics.

The performance was part of the group's third-annual silent auction benefit, Adeline's Holiday Happening.

The chorus is part of the Sweet Adelines International group, a worldwide organization of nearly 27,000 women in 15 countries.

According to the group's Web site, sweetadelinesintl.org, Sweet Adelines works to "advance the artform of music in style of barbershop harmony."

Many of Sweet Adelines choruses have performed at large sporting events, Olympic ceremonies and on nationally aired television shows.

The Wamego chorus has 44 members from 12 communities, Kathy Freeze, co-chair for the event, said.

The chorus' auction raises funds for the group, but also goes to awarding a scholarship to one female high school senior involved in music, Freeze said.

The halls inside the ballroom were adorned with Christmas decorations. Poinsettias lined the entrance, and tinsel and ribbon hung from the ceiling.

With about 300 people in attendance, Kathy LeValley, facility manager for the Houston Street Ballroom, said she was pleased with the turnout.

"I'd say the crowd is up a lot from last year," LeValley said.

Among the items up for auction were posters autographed by K-State basketball players and coaches, a performance by Sweet Adeline valued at $300, and homemade items like baskets, crafts and baked goods.

"Many of the homemade items were made by our members," Freeze said. "With practicing and making the items, I'd say we've been working this event since June."

Josh Runyan, junior in elementary education, attended the benefit for the second time.

"It's for a good cause, and it's nice to hear the live vocal Christmas music," he said.

THANKSGIVING | Dining center feasts make students feel at home; others take part in friends' celebrations

A FAMILIAR TRADITION

Derby Dining Center was packed with students sipping cider and nibbling on cheese after some got in line 45 minutes early to wait for the center's Thanksgiving dinner.

The meal consisted of almost everything one associates with Thanksgiving, from turkey and ham to mashed potatoes and crescent rolls.

Mark Edwards, unit director of Derby, said each of the dining centers served the dinner.

"Because it's who we are, and it's what we do," Edwards said. "We take care of these kids. We recognize that they're away from home, and that there are traditions and special events that they really begin to long for."

Sarah Guge, freshman in mass communications, said she liked the variety of food available. There were "tons of jellies and butters, and the dessert table was overflowing," she said.

Trees filled with handmade paper turkeys surrounded the dining center, and leaves hung above the tables on spray-painted tree branches.

Holly Pishney, catering coordinator, said the theme for the event was "The Fall Festival of Leaves," which was chosen with the help of a group of student dieticians who assisted with the dinner.

"It's something edgy — not something that they'd have at home," she said.

Laura Cline, freshman in family studies and human services, said the Thanksgiving dinner was fun, because her family will not celebrate the holiday this year.

A HOME AWAY FROM HOME

Amanda Dixon spent every Thanksgiving at home with her close family, eating all the traditional Thanksgiving dinner promises. But that tradition ended when she came to K-State.

Dixon, junior in graphic design, said her family lives in Clinton, N.J., and now that she lives in Kansas, she only visits once a year for Christmas.

"It's really not practical," she said. "There's no point in going home again two weeks later."

Dixon now spends the Thanksgiving holiday with the families of friends she has met at K-State.

"My friends always make sure I have somewhere to go," she said.

Dixon said one difference she has noticed is that her friends often have a family dinner with their extended families, while her family dinner consisted of her parents and siblings, but she said she likes meeting other people's families.

This year she is going to St. Louis with a friend. Dixon said she is excited because she has never visited the city.

PS3 | Release of gaming system leads to criminal action, online resales offered him $800, plus $200 to stay in place until midnight. When he came back, Esliit said the man gave him another $200 for being trustworthy.

"I was there for a total of about 24 hours, and I made $1,200," Esliit said. "It was interesting. Everyone who was in line was planning to resell the PlayStations on eBay.com."

Nationally, the sale of the system caused such pandemonium it was associated with several reports of crimes.

In Indiana, two men carrying PS3 systems they bought Friday were assaulted in an attempted robbery.

Two Connecticut men tried to rob a line of 15 people waiting to buy the new systems, knowing they would have a large amount of money.

One man who refused to surrender his money was shot with a shotgun. The wounds were not life-threatening, according to police.

Two Canadian men stood in line for two days, only to smash the new PS3 with a sledgehammer.

They did it as a "social experiment to see people's reaction," according to an article in the Ottawa Sun.

At Best Buy in Manhattan, someone tried to steal a PS3 out of a car, but people waiting outside the store foiled the would-be thief, store employee Joe Rodriguez said.

"When people went after him, I think he got scared," Rodriguez said. "He set it down really gently and kept running."

Best Buy sold 28 systems Friday. Rodriguez said 26 came in a shipment on Wednesday and two more arrived Friday.

"People camped for two days almost," Rodriguez said. "It was intense. We had those sold before we opened."

Ryan Foster, a Target employee, said there were no problems with the people who waited outside of Target.

"They were extremely civilized," he said. "They had their own little honor code."

On eBay, the online auction site, hundreds of people were selling the new systems for a huge mark-up Sunday. Asking prices ranged from $2,000 to $5,000, depending on the number of games and controllers included.

One listing aimed to tug at the heartstrings of potential buyers; a couple said the profit from the sale of the PS3 would be used to adopt a child, because they can't have children of their own.

Nintendo also released its newest system, the Wii, Sunday.

There was less of a frenzy for the $250 system, and a lower demand because more systems were available, but video-game players were nonetheless excited for its release.

"Since Nintendo announced they're going to send 2 million to the U.S., I don't think people are as anxious to sleep outside and stuff," Foster said. "People came an hour or two before we opened and got theirs no problem."

Hastings Books, Music and Video had a raffle for the six Wii systems it had in stock.

Trevor Bailey, senior in management information systems, said he was one of seven groups of people who entered the raffle, and he won the opportunity to buy a Wii. Bailey said he enjoyed trying out the new system.

"It's lot of fun," he said. "I mean, the controller is motion-activated, so if you swing it, the character will swing a sword. To hit a baseball, you swing it. It's unique, different than anything else I've played. You're not mashing buttons anymore."

Employees at local stores said they couldn't say for sure when the next shipment of PlayStation 3 systems would come but expected another one in the week or two before Christmas.

"The one thing that is 100 percent sure is that anyone who has ever been on, in or around the Cattracker's heart goes out," he said. "It hurts everybody. I can't imagine the level of hurt for those directly involved."

No date has been set for a memorial service, and Potroff said information will be released as the family chooses.

Dennis McCulloch, spokesperson for the University of Kansas Medical Center, said the hospital is not releasing any further information about Orr, due to the family's request.

"The family of the man injured Saturday in Lawrence says is being treated for a critical brain injury at the University of Kansas hospital," McCulloch said. "The family understands the public's interest in his condition but requests prayers and privacy."

In response to the tragedy, at least one unofficial support group, "In Memory of the Cattracker," created by Kingman High School student Jack Boyer has sprung up on Facebook, bringing together alumni, current K-State students, high school students and anyone moved by Saturday's event.

"I wanted to do something about it even though I really couldn't," Boyer, resident of Kingman, Kan., said via e-mail, "so I guess creating the Facebook group was the most I could do."

As of 4 p.m. Sunday, the group had about 20 members. By 6 p.m., it had grown to 44.

Boyer has used the Facebook group to post news about the condition of the injured man.

"I don't know anyone that was on the Cattracker when it happened, but they're part of the Wildcat family, so I feel for them," he said.

Delta Upsilon members bake pumpkin pies for Breadbasket dinner

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The dining room at Delta Upsilon was converted into a pumpkin pie kitchen Sunday night.

Delta Upsilon's 2006 pledge class and some of Alpha Delta Pi's new members gathered to bake pumpkin pies that will be donated for the Flint Hills Breadbasket's annual Thanksgiving dinner.

Robert Flack, sophomore in political science, helped organize the event. It was planned as a philanthropy for the fraternity's pledge class to satisfy a requirement for initiation.

"We will be taking the pies to the Breadbasket tomorrow.

The dinner is not until Thursday, though," Flack said as he moved boxes of pie crusts and pumpkin pie filling around the dining room.

Flack said each member of the 2006 DU pledge class will make a pie.

"We are expecting to make about 30 pies, and that will be about one for each pledge that we have," he said.

"I think that (the Breadbasket) is expecting 500 or more people at the dinner, so we should have enough pies to last."

ADPi members did not help plan the event, but DU members recruited them to help bake the pies.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket annually organizes and puts on the dinner. It is still looking for help in the form of donations and manpower for the event.

According to the Breadbasket's Web site, there are several ways students can help.

Donations, food and delivery drivers are all needed to make the evening a success.

The dinner, which lasts from noon to 2 p.m. on Thursday, is free to all those in the Manhattan community.

It will take place on the Manhattan High School east campus.

Those who want more information about the event can call (785) 537-0730.

Gallery exhibit showcases dozens of teapots, prints by Kansas artists

By Natasha Meyers
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Here is the handle, and here is the spout, but otherwise, these don't look like ordinary teapots. Each is distinguishable in color, shape and size.

Dozens of teapots are on display as a part of the "Pleasures: Prints and Teapots by Kansas Artists" exhibit at Strecker-Nelson Gallery.

Ester Ikeda, former Manhattan Arts Center instructor, and Yoshiro Ikeda, professor of art, both have teapots in the exhibit. Ester said she and her husband each have a different sculpting technique.

"He likes rough, very dry (teapots)," Ester said. "You can't use it. His is more of a sculpture. Mine is of a form. You can use it for tea, water or coffee."

She said her pieces also exhibit more design than Yoshiro's.

Ester said only eight of 10 of her ceramic pieces regularly survive the entire pottery process without breaking. However, she said she still enjoys pottery because it is a project that anyone can do, regardless of appearance.

"Anybody can do it - ugly or beautiful," Ester said.

She said she also likes the challenge that comes in sculpting clay pieces.

"It's soft and can mold any way you want it to mold," Ester said. "It seems easy, but it is hard."

Angelo C. Garzio, a former K-State professor, said he feels pottery is what made him who he is today. When he was in school at the University of Iowa, he took courses to earn his doctorate so he could become an art history professor.

To do so, he had to learn German, Latin and Hungarian. Garzio said Hungarian was the most difficult to learn.

To relieve the associated stress, he enrolled in a ceramics class, because he had heard excellent feedback about the course. There, Garzio finally found his passion, he said, but he decided to earn his degree anyway.

"It's a part of my being. If I weren't making pots, I wouldn't be alive," Garzio said.

Like Ester, Garzio said he finds joy in the challenge of the task and hopes his pottery will be used accordingly.

"I would like to think that they would be used by a fellow man with gentle care and love," Garzio said.

The exhibit also displayed a number of prints, including etchings, lithographs or monotypes.

When Rachel Melis, assistant professor of art, was asked by the gallery's owners, Barbara and Jay Nelson, to show her she prints, she said she felt honored.

"It is an honor to be asked to be in a Strecker-Nelson show, because the gallery has an excellent reputation and because the owners choose thoughtful and thought-provoking themes for their shows," Melis said.

Area residents shop for bargains, share wish lists over the weekend

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan residents whispered their wishes to Santa and fulfilled those of others on their list this weekend at Manhattan Town Center.

Santa Claus made appearances at the mall Saturday and Sunday, much to the delight of children of all ages. He visited with children from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Saturday and 12-6 p.m. on Sunday.

He posed for pictures with all who sat on his lap and handed out reindeer hats.

Many younger children said they loved the chance to tell Santa what they want for Christmas.

Four-year-old Brayden Webb said he thought talking to Santa was fun.

"I asked him all about presents and told him I wanted toys and trucks," he said.

LIGHTED PARADE

The Mayor's Spirit of the Holiday Lighted Parade begins at 6 p.m. today. All entries will be lit somehow.

The procession will begin at Manhattan Town Center and proceed along Poyntz Avenue, ending at Triangle Park in Aggieville where there will be a tree-lighting ceremony. Santa Claus will bring up the rear of the parade in a lighted buggy.

The parade benefits the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

LIGHTING UP MANHATTAN

Entries for Lighting Up the Little Apple, a campus-wide holiday lighting competition, are due today.

Students can enter with their residence halls, houses, apartments or greek organizations to compete for prizes, including Pepsi products and merchandise from area stores.

Decorations must be completed by Wednesday. Voting will take place Dec. 5 and 6, and the winners will be announced Dec. 8. For more information or to register, go to www.k-state.edu/osas, or call the Office of Student Activities and Services at (785) 532-6541.

Democrats to propose reinstating draft

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The United States' voluntary military could be spread dangerously thin by its current and possible future military endeavors, according to some Democratic lawmakers.

Some believe the best way to acquire new troops is to reinstate the draft.

"If we're going to challenge Iran and North Korea, as some people have asked, and send even more troops into Iraq, we can't do that without a draft," said Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., a veteran of the Korean War.

Once the Democrats take control of the House Ways and Means Committee in January, legislation officially will be put forward.

Rangel, the next chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, said he sees this idea as a way to deter politicians from launching unnecessary wars.

"There's no question in my mind that this president and this administration would never have invaded Iraq, especially on the flimsy evidence that was presented to the Congress, if indeed we had a draft and members of Congress and the administration thought that their kids from their communities would be placed in harm's way," Rangel said.

Conscription into national service would come with a choice. Those who would agree to military training and service that could place them directly in harm's way still would do so voluntarily.

Front-line soldiers and sailors would get the current highly specialized training and higher pay. Others would serve in non-combat support roles or in domestic service.

Rangel has introduced similar legislation in the past.

Earlier this year, he offered a plan to mandate military service for men and women between ages 18 and 42.

However, the bill saw little action in the Republican-led Congress.

"I don't see how anyone can support the war and not support the draft," Rangel said. "I think to do so is hypocritical."

Republican Congressional leadership, for the most part, agrees there is not enough of a troop presence in Iraq but believes instituting a draft is a move in the wrong direction.

"I think we can do this with an all-voluntary service, all-voluntary Army, Air Force, Marine Corps and Navy," said Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C. "And if we can't, then we'll look

U. FLORIDA TO RETIRE IRREPARABLE MASCOT

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — In the dilemma over repairing Ollie Gator, the inflatable mascot at women's volleyball and basketball games, the University Athletic Association has decided to "move in a different direction."

For Ollie, it's toward the bright end of the tunnel.

Martin Salamone, UAA marketing director, said the UAA has no plans to restore Ollie, who first appeared on University of Florida's sidelines about 10 years ago.

Ollie is admired by fans for his spunk. He adds pizzazz to the games with stunts like standing on his head and popping his limbs in and out.

The motor-powered Ollie suit malfunctioned before the preseason basketball show Mid-night Madness on Oct. 13, and the problems proved too severe to repair.

UCLA MIGHT GET GRANT FOR STEM-CELL RESEARCH

LOS ANGELES — Embryonic stem-cell research at University of California-Los Angeles might soon get a boost with new grants by the California Institute for Regenerative Medicine.

The amount of money UCLA will receive will not be determined until early 2007.

In 2005 the UCLA Institute for Stem Cell Biology and Medicine received a $3.75 million grant, which is more than any other research institution in California received.

COLUMBIA U. STUDENTS OPT FOR THEMED PARTIES

NEW YORK — Columbia University might not be known for its keg stands and weekend-long bashes, but it has given birth to its share of party planners.

It was here, after all, that the likes of immaculate hostess-extraordinaire Martha Stewart got their start.

Lately though, Columbia students could be giving hosts of yore a run for their money. Theme parties have become more and more popular in suites and residence hall rooms — students say the more intricate the theme, the better.

"The best themes get people talking about each other," senior Cliff Horton said. "But it has to be easy to execute."

Photographic record

Most greek houses with composites hang them in a formal room or a main entrance to the house so guests can see who the current members are.

Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority has membership records dating back to before the 1930s. Before composites were framed, like they are now, Kappa kept the records in scrapbooks.

Fraternities, sororities display composite boards of members' pictures as annual archive

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In most greek houses, a compilation of members' pictures hang for all to see. However, the details of the composites differ from house to house.

Rachel Strouts, Panhellenic Council president, said greek houses use their yearly composites as a chapter record of members.

Although Greek Affairs

does not have an official role with the composites, it indirectly deals with them, like when photographers contact the office to inform the chapters about their business, Strouts said.

It is the chapter that choose what photographer or company makes the composite.

Ian Hartsig, treasurer for Phi Kappa Theta, said his fraternity received its composite about a month ago.

He said the layout of the composite is consistent through the years, and members wear the same tuxedo and tie, which belong to the house.

The composites from years past hang on the walls throughout the house, Hartsig said.

"We try to put a pretty good representation of years past," he said. "It's fun to see how the former alumni look and what offices they held."

Hartsig said security for his house's composite is the same as the security for the house.

He said there is not a specific way members secure the composite, but they try to make sure there are always people around the house.

Strouts said when composites are stolen from chapter houses, Greek Affairs contacts chapter presidents to help in returning the composite to its proper owner.

"Our main role in that is to encourage respect," she said. "If a chapter ever has a problem with their composite going missing, we can help them recover it."

Jamie Settle, member of Kappa Alpha Theta, said the composites hang in different locations in each greek house, but her sorority has its most current composite in its front foyer.

Theta's activities chair selects what the women wear in the photographs, Settle said.

She said the women have worn the same outfits for the last few years, but in the past, they each chose their own.

She said members can buy their picture that is used for the composite if they want to do so.

"It's just like yearbook or high school pictures," she said. "You can always buy your own."

O.J. Simpson's book, interview might aim to generate 'blood money,' but poor publicity only opens old wounds

Lately, O.J. Simpson has sounded like "Chicago" songstress Velma Kelly:

"I didn't do it, but if I'd done it..."

More than a decade after the murders of his ex-wife, Nicole Brown, and her friend Ronald Goldman, Simpson decided the time has come to remind everyone of the brutal, unspeakable acts of cruelty of which he was accused.

With the help of a ghostwriter, Simpson recently finished a book titled "If I Did It," a work that describes how he would have committed the double homicide, if he had done so, though Simpson still adamantly denies involvement in the crime.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Simpson said, "I made it clear from the first day I met the writer that I wasn't involved. I said, 'I have nothing to confess.'"

In a case of shockingly bad taste, Fox made plans to air on television an interview with Simpson about the book, again explaining how he could have carried out the murder of his ex-wife, had he been responsible. Thanks to public outcry, both the release of the book and the airing of the interview have been cancelled.

Broadcasting to the world that one does, in fact, know a good plan to murder one's wife does not ease suspicions.

The statement, "Yeah, I know of a way it could have been done ... but I didn't do it," is highly questionable. Speaking hypothetically (as seems to be the fashion nowadays), let's suggest O.J. actually is innocent on all counts and perhaps has innocently and inadvertently formulated a workable way of committing the crime on his own. General societal rules dictate that in this case, the homicidal plot should be kept to oneself. For O.J. especially, this option should be preferred over stirring up old fires.

Treating the brutal murder of one's ex-wife in this manner is highly suspect. Using it to gain publicity and money bring to mind words like "cold-blooded, sociopathic monster" more often than "grieving widower."

In the AP interview, Simpson specifically said the book and TV interview were for the purpose of making money.

"This was an opportunity for my kids to get their financial legacy ... I made it clear that it's blood money," he said.

Well, when he puts it that way, what choice did he have? Other than not capitalizing on the stabbing of his children's mother, that is.

Regardless of Simpson's guilt or innocence, this is a horrendous example of exploitation. The crime is treated with none of the respect and gravity it deserves.

At a press conference, Fox CEO Rupert Murdoch said, "I and senior management agree with the American public that this was an ill-considered project."

Indeed it was, and despite the concession, the fact the idea ever grew out of its infancy speaks unfavorably of Murdoch and the Fox network (thereby tarnishing its sterling reputation).

It is clear the desire of networks to raise the shock value has gotten out of hand. Perhaps we should revert to the days of the Roman Coliseum and laugh as humans are eaten alive. Cruel, yes, but think of the ratings.

The detrimental value of "If I Did It" to O.J.'s name is trumped only by its disgraceful nature. Clearly Fox has some reviewing of decency standards to do, and O.J. needs to brush up on his defense tactics.

Say 'thank you' often to show gratitude for others' role in your life

After celebrating Thanksgiving on Thursday and talking to a co-worker this week, I came to the revelation that no one says "thank you" anymore.

Even if a person does say thank you, it is usually not meaningful but merely out of habit. My co-worker told me he never sends thank-you cards because he thinks giving a gift should be selfless, and the giver should not expect a thank you.

This is simply not true. It is always nice to be appreciated. Many times, it makes people realize their efforts are not in vain, that what they do deserves some respect and gratification. Just because a person does someone a favor or gives a gift does not mean he or she does not need to receive a thank you.

Sometimes a gift makes the giver feel better than the person receiving it, especially if this is the giver's way of showing his or her own gratitude. Many times a gift can be unmerited. However, it is important to be thankful for everything that is given in life.

It is important to show people in your life you care. Just because the obligatory thank you is given doesn't mean the person really knows how touching the gift or favor was.

Sometimes it is hard to admit you need another person, but that doesn't mean people should be above showing gratitude, because this is one of the most important gifts that can be given.

There are always so many things we wish we could have said to those loved ones who have left our life, whether intentionally or in a hurry. No one should waste time with empty thank you's and broken promises of reciprocity. Life shouldn't be filled with regrets, and this also means there needs to be certain messages of admiration to those special people before it is too late and time doesn't allow it.

Sending thank-you notes or flowers or picking up that cheesy dollar item from the bargain bin that recalls an inside joke are all special ways to honor vital relationships with friends and family that create a supportive net that is always there in crises.

Too many times these people are taken for granted and eventually might become tired of constantly giving while others constantly take.

In a world where it is nearly impossible to be totally independent - most of the time we all depend on others for the food we eat and the money we make - the importance of gratitude must not be forgotten.

Even if it might sound foolish and out of the ordinary, call a person who has done a million favors or a nosy (but concerned) relative and tell this person how much his or her efforts have meant. This small act is probably easier than what this person did for you. Besides, it's always comforting to know someone on this big, scary planet cares about you.

Reasoning behind reinstating draft makes sense, but idea meets opposition

College students and young people today have a lot to worry about: school, relationships, money, jobs. But 40 years ago, young Americans had an additional burden on their minds: the military draft.

The draft ended in the 1970s, and we are fortunate we are no longer required to put ourselves in harm's way when the country deems it necessary. However, a New York Congressman has proposed reinstating a draft for national service; his recommendation has been met with fierce opposition.

Democratic Rep. Charles Rangel's reasoning is admirable and often overlooked. Rangel believes that if politicians had loved ones serving unwillingly in the military, our government would not be so quick to start and continue costly wars.

We, as an editorial board, could not reach a consensus on one single position in regard to a draft, but we agree with Rangel's reasons and justification.

With a draft, the situation in Iraq would become something that affects more Americans directly rather than something we see in the news.

A draft might not be the way to achieve the goal of making politicians think before they vote, but Rangel has made us discuss the subject, which is a start. We, as Americans, have a responsibility to care about our military; Rangel has reminded us of this.

Team gives senior Werner send-off in sweep of KU

By Austin Meek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The question was posed to coach Suzie Fritz a few weeks ago, with the K-State volleyball squad headed for its worst record in more than a decade.

What's left to play for?

Fritz said the team wanted to send its only senior, Sandy Werner, out on a good note.

That's exactly what happened Saturday night, as Werner notched the final kill to give K-State a 3-0 (30-16, 30-14, 30-28) sweep of Kansas at Ahearn Field House.

Werner, who finished her career with 1,109 kills, led K-State with 12 on Saturday. But it was her last kill that had everyone talking.

"It was very appropriate. As many kills as Sandy had in her career, it's appropriate that she goes out with one," Fritz said.

The kill, which came on a set by Megan Farr, gave K-State a come-from-behind victory in game three.

"So many things went through my head," Farr said. "I was going to take the easy one and set (Kelsey) Chipman, but I had to set Sandy, because I knew she'd get the kill."

Though the season has had its ups and downs, Werner said she couldn't have asked for a better ending.

"It's the perfect way to end my career, beating KU," she said. "We came out on fire."

Indeed, K-State (12-18, 4-16 Big 12 Conference) dominated early in the match, building big leads in games one and two. A strong service game helped the Wildcats take control early.

For the match, K-State recorded a season-high 15 aces, five more than the previous season high. Eight of those aces came in game two.

"Our plan was to serve tough," said junior setter Stacey Spiegelberg, who has nine aces in her last two matches. "We didn't expect to get that many aces, but it just helped us win and get that confidence."

K-State also recorded 22 block assists, breaking the single-season record set by last year's squad.

With the win, K-State earned back-to-back victories for the first time in conference play and moved out of last place in the Big 12. Kansas, which finished 3-17 in conference play and 10-19 overall, is now last.

Glitz, glamour of SoCal fit O.J. like a glove

Forty years after O.J. Simpson rewrote the record books at Southern California and a few months after he wrote the would-be American classic "If I Did It," another O.J. is making headlines in SoCal.

O.J. Mayo, once the centerpiece of a troika of high-profile basketball recruits linked to K-State coach Bob Huggins, signed a Letter of Intent at USC, putting to rest any rumors that he would commit to K-State.

Mayo is a 6-foot-5 point guard who scores 30 points per game, even though his former high school coach said he's more of a passer than a scorer. He was a first-team all-state selection ... as an eighth-grader. He's deadly from three-point range and unstoppable off the dribble. Mayo and K-State signee Bill Walker were best friends and teammates at Cincinnati's North College Hill High School. Mayo has LeBron James on speed-dial.

So why aren't K-State fans a little more disappointed Mayo chose to take his services elsewhere?

To begin, USC has been at the top of Mayo's list for months, so it's no surprise he opted to become a Trojan.

Also, K-State secured commitments from Walker and Michael Beasley, the other two recruits in Huggie's holy trinity. Mayo would have been a nice addition, but — in the immortal words of Meatloaf — "two out of three ain't bad."

But here's the biggest reason K-State fans shouldn't mourn the loss of Mayo: Manhattan, like the bloody glove, is just too small for O.J.

Mayo has been groomed to be an NBA superstar, billed as the next LeBron. His college career will be little more than a glorified NBA tryout.

Mayo and his family seem to take a business-like approach to young O.J.'s progression toward NBA stardom. Signing with USC was a calculated business decision, a way to ensure Mayo spends plenty of time in front of TV cameras. With the Lakers playing just down the street, Mayo knows he'll get maximum exposure in Los Angeles.

"Coach (Tim) Floyd has been an NBA coach, and the city of Los Angeles is a great marketing city," Mayo told ESPN.com. "Hopefully, if everything goes well, I can market myself better for the next level."

Mayo watched USC football players Matt Leinart and Reggie Bush achieve movie-star status and nab fat NFL contracts, a factor that clearly influenced his decision.

"It's a perfect situation," Mayo told USA Today. "After players like

Huggins uses 13 different players in 68-57 victory

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Bob Huggins made at least one point clear during K-State's 68-57 win over Coppin State Saturday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

Either his players will hustle, or find themselves on the bench.

It didn't take long for most of the starting line-up to figure this out. About three minutes into the game, junior guard Blake Young made a steal and brought the ball across the floor only to miss a layup on the offensive end.

The problem wasn't Young's missed layup; it was that none of his teammates followed him to the other side of the court. Sure enough, Huggins benched those four players the first opportunity he got.

"We're going to play hard," Huggins said. "We may miss shots and do any of that other stuff, but we're going to play hard."

Young led the Wildcats in minutes with 35, despite missing all eight of his shots from the field and finishing the game with only two points. Huggins said it was Young's intensity that kept him on the floor.

"He is the only guy that I can remember that has picked up a loose ball," Huggins said. "He hasn't made any shots, but tell me somebody who has."

Huggins continued to mix up his rotation for the rest of the game. By about midway through the first half he had used 13 different players.

Freshman walk-on guard Chris Merriewether and junior walk-on guard Ryan Patzward both reached season highs in minutes. Sophomore forward Deilvez Yearby also played more than he had in previous games.

Several players subbed into the game only to be benched less than 30 seconds later. Freshman forward Luis Colon was benched after 14 seconds of play midway through the second half.

Huggins took Colon out of the game after he committed an offensive foul. Colon threw his headband down on his way back to his seat and didn't return to the game.

Even senior forward Cartier Martin found himself constantly checking in and out of the game. With 7 1/2 minutes to play and the Wildcats leading 46-45, Martin took a seat on the bench with only two points. He didn't have time to get comfortable before he was put back in 10 seconds later.

From that point on Martin didn't miss a shot, scoring 11 of his

BKW | K-State wins 1, drops 1 over weekend at Lady Rebel Shootout

Kimberly Dietz poured in 18 points, and Claire Coggins added 15 as K-State cruised to a 75-34 win over Elon in the consolation game of the Lady Rebel Shootout in Las Vegas on Saturday afternoon.

Ashley Sweat and Shana Wheeler chipped in 10 points each, and Marlies Gipson grabbed a game-high 11 rebounds for K-State (4-1), which led 36-20 at halftime before holding Elon to just 14 points in the second half.

The Wildcats held an 8-7 lead just under six minutes into the game when Dietz and Coggins ignited a 12-0 run to give the Wildcats a 13-point edge.

Elon (2-3), which got seven points from Sashonna Moore and Amber Wall, briefly sliced K-State's advantage back to single digits with four minutes to go in the half, but the Wildcats scored eight of the final 10 points of the period to push their advantage to 16 at the break.

K-State's hot play continued in the second half. The Wildcats used a 13-4 run over the first six minutes to take a 25-point lead, and the rout was on.

The Wildcats' largest margin of the game was its final one as Coggins hit a free throw with 22 seconds to play to put the finishing touches on the 41-point win.

On Friday, Dietz had 14 points and Gipson 12 for K-State, which opened the game on an 11-2 run but was plagued by sloppy execution in its 56-53 loss to Wisconsin.

The Wildcats committed 27 turnovers against only six assists. Fifteen came in the first half, as K-State shot 47 percent from the field but trailed 30-27 at the break.

The Wildcats pulled ahead briefly in the second half before Wisconsin built a four-point lead with 20 seconds to go.

Coggins knocked down a 3-pointer to cut the lead to one, but Wisconsin's Rae Lin Dalia hit two free throws to make it 56-53 with three seconds left.

FBC | Trojans move up to No. 2; Michigan drops a spot in AP poll

Southern California is the new No. 2. The Trojans advanced one spot to overtake Michigan in The Associated Press Top 25 on Sunday, a day after their 44-24 victory over Notre Dame. USC, the sixth team to be ranked No. 2 this season behind No. 1 Ohio State, leads the Wolverines by 36 points in the poll.

Michigan, which completed its season with a 42-39 loss to Ohio State on Nov. 18, fell to No. 3. The Wolverines (11-1) are 63 points ahead of No. 4 Florida, which beat Florida State 21-14 to improve to 11-1.

Ohio State (12-0) was a unanimous No. 1 for the second consecutive week and third time this year. The Buckeyes received 65 first-place votes from the media panel.

While the Buckeyes have been top-ranked since the preseason, No. 2 has changed frequently. Notre Dame, Texas, Auburn and Florida also have held the second spot. Michigan's six-week run was the longest of any team this season.

Michigan had a nine-point lead on USC in last week's poll, but the Trojans changed the minds of numerous voters on Saturday night.

A passion for dance

1st-year Classy Cat brings global experience, life-long learning to team

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The spotlight was on her — a young girl in a pink tutu and sequins sparkling just as bright as her smile. She wasn't scared then. She isn't scared now.

The same fearless woman can be spotted wearing her purple sequins and shaking it with the Classy Cats.

Shamekia Kirklin, freshman in pre-psychology from Copperstone, Texas, and a member of the Classy Cats, said she loves the crowd.

Amanda Young, a fourth-year Classy Cat, said Kirklin brings a lot of spirit to the team.

"Shamekia is the only girl on the team that has the same amount of energy at the beginning of the game and at the end," Young said.

Kirklin said she never tries to out-dance or outshine any of the other Classy Cats.

"I just dance. I love performing in front of people," she said.

Although Kirklin grew up in a military family and has moved around since she was born, she found one thing she could do well everywhere she went: dance.

She said her love for dance started at age 2.

For five years, she lived in Germany, where she learned different styles of dance.

"Their dance is definitely different from dance here in the U.S., because they have their own culture, and they show it in their dance," she said.

While in high school, Kirklin performed in many places across the United States. She has danced with famous choreographers like Wade Robson from the reality TV show "So You Think You Can Dance," and choreographers for top music artists like Usher, Britney Spears and Beyoncé.

She has studied under many dance teachers, but one, Denise Wall, has had a particularly large influence, Kirklin said.

Wall has produced many national dance success stories straight from her studio in Virginia Beach, Va.

"She helped me realize my passion for dance and how I wanted to continue dance throughout college," she said.

Kirklin said Wall was strict and loving at the same time.

"When it came to dance, that was her passion, (and it) made her job worthwhile. She wanted everyone to dance the same and look the same," she said.

Kirklin said Wall was a positive role model and a second mom.

When it was time for Kirklin to decide what to do after high school, attending K-State was high on the list.

"It was very ironic that she (Kirklin) was out there rooting for K-State to beat her hometown team of Texas at the last home game," Kathleen Henao, Classy Cat coordinator, said.

Auditioning for the Classy Cats seemed like the next logical step in collegiate life for Kirklin after she chose to attend K-State.

After the two rounds of team try-outs, coordinators announced the selected women's numbers.

"When they called my number, I was so excited and ready to be a Classy Cat," Kirklin said.

Henao said women who audition for the team must attend a clinic, learn Classy Cat dance style and pay $500 to $700 in uniform, camp and other fees.

"This clinic usually weeds out some of the girls that are not so serious," Henao said.

Henao said the women have an hour to learn two combination dances of about 45 seconds each. Then they are asked to perform the dances for judges. Cuts are made, and auditioners start a second round of more intense techniques.

Kirklin is the only black woman on the Classy Cat dance team.

Coming from predominantly white schools, Kirklin learned how to adapt and not view at herself as an outsider because she looked different.

"I don't look at dance as a race. It's just performing," she said. "We all love dance."

Henao said Kirklin is talented and is a great asset to the team.

"Shamekia is a person who wants to be remembered for who she is and not what (race) she is," Henao said.

This part of Kirklin's personality came from her family, Kirklin said. Relatives taught her not to look at race but look at individuals and their accomplishments.

"I am so close to my family. They have had so much to do with the person I am today," she said.

In her spare time, she choreographs solos for high school dance teams.

Another passion Kirklin has is helping people. She said she values assisting and supporting her close friends.

While in high school, Kirklin earned her Certified Nursing Assistant degree.

"I want to be a nurse so that I can help people," she said.

If it came between a professional dance career and being a registered nurse, Kirklin said she would try to do both because she is passionate about both.

In Kirklin's transition into college, she has faced some obstacles, including moving out of the residence halls mid-semester to have freedom to study and time to herself.

And when it comes to being a part of the Classy Cats, Kirklin said the team is close and helps fulfill her college experience.

Henao said the women participate in team bonding activities often.

Young said the Classy Cats are like a family.

"We have team unity in more than just dance and appearance. We are unified in our daily lives," Young said.

Contest opens AIDS to dialogue

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Young Americans between the ages of 13 and 24 are contracting HIV at a rate of two people per hour, according to the White House Office of National AIDS Policy.

To fight this trend, the HEAR ME Project embarks on its third-annual HIV/AIDS Story-Writing Contest.

HEAR ME encourages students ages of 14 to 22 to discuss the topic in an informal and creative setting, according to the project Web site. The mission of the contest is to empower youth to make informed, healthy choices.

HEAR ME partners with celebrities to accomplish this goal. This year's entrees will be judged by a celebrity panel that includes HEAR ME honorary chair Morgan Freeman, Spike Lee and Hilary Duff.

According to a press release from HEAR ME, the winner of the contest will receive $2,500. The two winners of the previous contests also were made into educational films.

Last year, the number of entries more than doubled, with stories coming from 40 countries.

Issac Madison, director of the Regional AIDS Project in Manhattan, said educating people about the prevention of HIV and AIDS is the best defense against these diseases.

"With there being no cure to these diseases, all we can do is learn more and teach others on how to avoid them," Madison said. "Anyone who is willing to use their talents or skills to educate others about HIV and AIDS is saving lives."

Entries are to be no more than five pages and must be postmarked by Dec. 1. For more details, visit the HEAR ME contest Web site at www.hearmecontest.org.

TV's 'Bachelor' to seek women for 10th season

Staff reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Today, women looking for a little love in Manhattan just might find it within an hour's drive.

ABC affiliate KTKA in Topeka has announced an open casting call for female contestants on the reality TV series "The Bachelor."

The casting call will take place tonight at Piggins Sports Bar in Topeka.

The casting call is 6-8 p.m. Those interested either can pick up an application at the 49 ABC studios or download one from its Web site, www.49abcnews.com.

ABC producers said they are seeking ambitious, charming and successful bachelorettes who are ready to find true love.

Bachelorettes selected will be featured in the show's 10th season of the popular TV series, which introduces one bachelor to 25 eligible women. He then eliminates women from the group until one woman remains — with the choice to establish a relationship beyond the camera crew.

KTKA News contributed to this report.

Mallory's murder was the first of seven committed by Wuornos over the next year. Perhaps because she was one of the few female killers to gain widespread fame and notoriety, she was dubbed "America's first female serial killer." Her case was heavily publicized through television talk show appearances and a documentary, "The Selling of a Serial Killer." Her story, filled with abuse and neglect, also was illustrated in the movie "Monster," starring Charlize Theron and Christina Ricci.

While many stores said they could not comment on what they have done to prepare for the holidays, a few mentioned some of the best-selling items they have had so far.

Sarah Gronburg, sales associate at Victoria's Secret, said it had one-day-only specials on the busy shopping day after Thanksgiving.

"With any $50 purchase, customers received a free Victoria's Secret tote bag," she said.

Gronburg said she thinks this holiday season has been just as busy as last year's so far.

"We're selling a lot of the things that we have available only for the holidays," she said.

"For example, we have holiday pajamas, robes, fragrances and our Pink sweatpants."

Vanity started its season with an interesting twist, because the day after Thanksgiving was the store's first day of business.

"It was all of the employees' first day of work, so everyone was kind of nervous," Kactus Kelly, Vanity sales associate, said.

She said the store was busy, and Saturday's business was steady, too.

"We've sold a lot of our Vanity jeans," Kelly said. "A lot of people stop by to shop for other people, like grandmothers looking for clothes for their granddaughters. It's a lot of fun to help them look."

DRAFT | Legislation to be put forward in Congress by N.Y. representative; students express opposition for some other option."

Polls by both Gallup and USA Today show seven out of 10 Americans oppose the re-instatement of the draft.

"One of the great things about America is our freedom, and mandating military service is taking away part of that freedom," said Jared Hupp, freshman in pre-professional secondary education.

Legislation regarding the draft will face a difficult trek to becoming law. First it must pass through both the House of Representatives and the Senate, but it also must bypass a presidential veto. The only way for Congress to override this veto is by a two-thirds vote in both chambers.

"I think (Rangel) realized that this will never pass," said Casey Walker, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management. "In my opinion, he is just putting this out there to point out the fact that if we had a draft, we wouldn't be in a pointless war."

Vendors employ hobbies to create crafts for show

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A maze of vendors selling everything from stained glass to rocking horses filled Pot-troff Hall in CiCo Park Saturday for the Homemade for the Holidays craft show.

Some vendors chatted with the numerous customers who browsed the crowded aisles, while others still crafted and waited to sell their goods.

Lisa Volland, Topeka resident, said she paid a fee when she registered for the event in order to sell her homemade wreaths.

"It's usually a pretty good show," she said. "People come to spend money."

Volland said she sells the wreaths during the fall, and the profit she makes from each craft show depends on what other events are happening in the area.

She said she began her hobby with making bows because she was bored, and that eventually developed into making wreaths and decorating antique items.

"I always have to be crafting," Volland said.

Volland is a school teacher and makes crafts during the summer and sometimes between grading papers, she said.

"Some people in here have been crafting for years and years," Volland said. "I want to be one of those people."

Jessie Redding, St. George,

Kan., resident, was visiting the craft show with her grandmother like she does every holiday season, she said.

Redding said she usually attends the Homemade for the Holidays craft show to look for Christmas gifts.

"I'm just looking around," she said. "I'm looking for jewelry — for myself and my family members."

Mary Claves, St. George, Kan., resident, sold crocheted hats and potholders for the first time at the craft show, although she has attended other craft shows in the past.

"I don't do it for commercial reasons," she said. "It's just a hobby and a stress buster."

Vanity opens 4th store in Kansas; chain targets 17- to 22-year-olds

By Jesse Sachdeva
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Opening its doors on the busiest shopping day of the year, national retail clothing chain Vanity started its fourth Kansas store in Manhattan Town Center Nov. 24.

With existing shops in Salina; Hays, Kan.; and Topeka, the store aims to bring its clothing to the college-town atmosphere of Manhattan.

Shay Hastings, manager of Vanity, previously worked at Vanity stores in Hays and Oklahoma.

"We target that 17-22 age group, but we also carry things for women of all ages, with a variety of styles and extended sizes," Hastings said.

"We have a lot, ranging from club clothes to lounge-wear, so you have something, and then something for the morning after."

Despite opening for business the day after Thanksgiving, the busy shopping day known as "Black Friday," Hastings said she thought her staff kept it together.

"It was a blast. There were a lot of people, but it wasn't anything we couldn't handle," she said.

Lauren Davis, sophomore in open option, said she has shopped at Vanity in Topeka and thought the Manhattan location wasn't as fully stocked.

"The Topeka store had a few more options, but since this store just opened I expect it will get better," Davis said.

Whitney Madsen and Paige Hoyt, sophomores at Manhattan High School, said they frequent Wet Seal, a store in the mall that caters to the same clientele. Wet Seal opened earlier this fall.

"In comparison to Wet Seal, the store layout is a lot smaller, but they are still able to fit in just as many clothes," Hoyt said.

Madsen said she agreed.

"The fashions at Vanity were similar to Wet Seal. I thought Vanity was a little less expensive, too," Madsen said. "The staff were pretty friendly — I think the store (is) off to a good start."

MAYO | Player craves spotlight to boost NBA dreams

Reggie Bush and Matt Leinart, the school is ready for a player of my caliber."

Of course, Walker and Beasley didn't come to K-State to join the chess club. They want to play in the NBA, and they see Huggins as their ticket.

But they don't seem to crave the national spotlight like Mayo does. They can be happy playing for Huggins in the relative obscurity of Manhattan.

It's doubtful Mayo ever could.

Besides, it would be hard to find enough shots to keep Mayo, Walker and Beasley happy. Mayo wants to be biggest show in town, and he might get his wish at USC.

The bottom line is this: Manhattan and Mayo simply do not fit.

As my old friend Johnnie Cochran always said, "If it don't fit, you must not commit."

BASKETBALL | Martin reaches 1,000 career points

13 points in the final minutes. Martin hit three 3-pointers and two free throws to help K-State outscore Coppin State 22-12 with 7:50 left in the game.

"I knew I could make shots," Martin said. "I talked to coach Huggins, and he helped me out with the little things I was doing wrong. He helped me get my shot back to where it once was."

Martin sunk his first 3-pointer with less than seven minutes to play. The basket gave Martin 1,000 points for his career and made him the 19th K-State player to reach that mark.

Although it was Martin who sparked the Wildcats late in the game, K-State relied on senior guard Lance Harris in the first half. Harris scored 13 of the Wildcats' 30 first-half points and finished with a career-high 26 points.

Despite his own strong performance, Harris said he felt the team has a long way to go.

"It's very frustrating because we haven't played our best game yet," Harris said. "We aren't playing at the level we have been striving for."

Traveling Wildcats lets alumni globetrot to 25 places annually

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan resident Dave Woolfolk is taking a trip with his family through Traveling Wildcats for the second time in July.

Traveling Wildcats is an organization that offers group travel to K-State alumni and friends through the K-State Alumni Association.

Woolfolk, a 1962 K-State graduate, said he and his wife have traveled to Italy with the organization and will travel to Alaska this summer.

"We liked being with a group of tourists, some with K-State or college background," he said.

Woolfolk said he and his wife also have been on a number of cruises, but they have enjoyed taking trips with Traveling Wildcats because of the group's planning and organization.

"They do a great job," he said.

Traveling Wildcats takes 400-500 people to about 25 destinations each year.

Jana Wyatt, director of alumni travel, said the Alumni Association works with companies to take care of the trips, putting together excursions, meals and transportation.

The trips are not associated with athletic travel, Wyatt said.

These trips allow people to visit destinations around the globe with others associated with K-State. Wyatt said the four most popular destinations have been Alaska, Russia, China and the Panama Canal.

The travel companies Wyatt works through come in February each year and showcase the trips the groups are planning for the following year. Wyatt said the Alumni Association surveys alumni and then decides which trips it will put on the schedule.

Wyatt said the travel companies also pay for all marketing for the trips, including sending out 10,000-17,000 brochures at no real cost to the Alumni Association.

The companies that work with the Alumni Association include Alumni Holidays International, Alumni Travel Group, Go Next and Intrav.

Wyatt said she wants alumni to know group travel can be a fun way for people with similar interests to go to destinations together.

"What I would like to do is dispel the notion that group travel is for the older generation and that it doesn't have choices," she said.

Mary Jo Griffith, Manhattan resident, said the program is a good way for people to travel with other college people, either from K-State or other universities.

Griffith, who is preparing to go to Vienna, Italy, next week with the program said she has been on six to eight trips over time, traveling with friends or on her own.

Wyatt said the program allows people who have an association with K-State to continue their relationship with the university.

"It just continues on that lifelong link to allow K-Staters to travel together," she said.

Memorial honors transgender victims of hate crimes with poems, stories

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Dozens gathered at the Dusty Bookshelf Nov. 20 for a memorial honoring people in the transgender community who have been victims of hate crimes.

The Kansas Equality Coalition of the Flint Hills sponsored the event as a part of the eighth-annual nationwide Transgender Day of Remembrance, observed each year in November.

"The Dusty Bookshelf was really filled up," said Alley Stoughton, event organizer and associate professor of computing and information science. "We used all of their chairs and more."

Stoughton said most of the people in attendance were K-State students, with a number of representatives from Ordinary Women and the Department of Women's Studies.

Participants read a poem by S. Bear Bergman and first-person accounts of slain transgendered people.

"Perhaps 25 students bravely did this, and the atmosphere was very emotional," Stoughton said. "Then we finished up with a period of (question and answer) and comments."

"One community member talked about the transgender friend of hers who was raped years ago and has never really recovered from it."

Although not every person honored on the Day of Remembrance self-identified as transgender, each was a victim of violence based on bias against transgender or gender-variant people.

The event began in 1999 in San Francisco to honor Rita Hester, whose alleged anti-transgender murder case remains unsolved, according to the K-State Web site, www.cis.ksu.edu/~stough/tdor.html.

Stefani Schrader, president of Ordinary Women, said the group wanted to be involved with the event because it raises consciousness on campus about people of all genders.

"It was startling to hear the wide array of ages these stories were about," said Schrader, senior in women's studies and English literature. "Also, there were a couple of local stories and some international ones. It's not just one certain group of people hate crimes affect. It was important to share but at the same time really startling."

5th-annual mayor's holiday parade features almost 50 lighted entries

By Jesse Sachdeva
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Marching bands, Girl Scouts, candy canes, elected officials, even garbage trucks and sailboats all marched down Poyntz Avenue last night.

The festivities were part of the fifth-annual Mayor's Spirit of the Holiday Lighted Parade.

Since it started in 2002, the then-small parade has grown into an extravagant production featuring nearly 50 participants. Proceeds from the parade benefit the Flint Hills Breadbasket and the Mayor's Holiday Food and Fund Drive.

Lisa Rockley, coordinator of parade entries for the City of Manhattan, said she spent several months planning the parade.

"Involvement is up a lot this year," Rockley said. "We have several new participants that are bringing new things to the parade. The Blue Valley Yacht Club is one of them. They actually brought in a sailboat to use as a float."

Among the more eccentric floats of the evening was the entry from Express Personal Services, which was themed "Candy Cane Lane."

"Our staff contributed a lot to the float," Lynn Hinrichsen, owner of Express, said. "We've been getting together on Sunday nights the last few weeks to work on it."

Craig Doan, junior in biochemistry, said he participated in the first Spirit of the Holiday parade as a member of the Manhattan High School Marching Band in 2002.

"It's substantially better this year," Doan said. "That first year there were like 15 floats. I'm impressed how much it's grown."

Sharon Runyan, coordinator of youth ministry for Seven Dolors Catholic Church, worked with Manhattan Catholic Schools' sixth-grade class on its float.

The class' float featured a Nativity scene, with members dressed as wise men and shepherds.

The Manhattan Catholic Schools' float won Most Creative Entry during the parade award ceremony in Aggieville. Express was awarded the Mayor's Trophy for the second consecutive year.

The evening ended with the ceremonial lighting of the Mayor's Holiday Tree in Aggieville's Triangle Park.

"I'm glad to see all the community involvement with the parade," Alison Smith, Manhattan resident, said. "It always gets me excited for this time of year."

Senior wins Marshall Scholarship

By Hannah Sanders
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State student won a Marshall Scholarship this year.

Lisa Kitten, senior in mechanical engineering, was selected to receive the scholarship after an intense application process.

The process began in spring 2006 and included a personal statement and a study proposal along with a 30-minute panel interview. After receiving the signature of K-State President Jon Wefald and the university's endorsement, Kitten proceeded on to the national competition.

She was one of 25 selected from a group of about 200 to interview in Chicago at the British Consulate-General on Nov. 8 to compete for the scholarship, according to a K-State Media Relations press release.

Kitten said the process was different because the majority of the interview was not about her area of study.

"They asked me about John Paul II and immigration policy and British healthcare policy, along with things like the nuclear situation in Iran," she said. "They want you to have a good understanding of the world and be interested in strengthening the ties between Britain and the U.S."

Kitten is a senior member of the Engineering Student Council and has served as president, director of publicity, director of development and freshman leadership committee president. She chairs the Mechanical and Nuclear Engineering Student Advisory Council, sits on the Coordinating Committee for People with Disabilities, and is a member of the Engineering in Medicine and Biology Society. She serves as a mentor for new engineering students, is a member of Women Mentoring Women, and was an Engineering Ambassador.

"Not one single activity set me apart for the scholarship. It was the variety of activities and showing the panel that they weren't résumé-builders but that I really do care about them," Kitten said.

Kitten will attend the University of Oxford in Oxford, England, to study biomedical engineering.

"I will be doing work with prosthesis research at Oxford because I feel that the field directly impacts the quality of someone's life," she said.

Financial aid office warns students against paying companies to file FAFSA

By Austin Apple
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Office of Student Financial Assistance is warning students about a company offering to file students' Free Application for Federal Student Aid for a fee.

The office sent an e-mail to students Wednesday that said paying the company Student Financial Aid Services to complete the FAFSA is something students should never do.

"Students should be aware that the application for federal financial aid is free," said Larry Moeder, assistant vice president of Student Financial Assistance.

The first line on the Student Financial Aid Services Web site says it is not affiliated with the United States Department of Education or FAFSA, said Scott Alexander, company vice president of sales and marketing.

According to the company's Web site, students can have an application filed for as low as $49.99 for returning applicants and $79.99 for new applicants.

Moeder said several students reported they received information about the service in an e-mail and asked K-State's office about the company.

"We told them not to reply,"

Moeder said.

Alexander said the company has been in business for 15 years and helps students and parents complete the FAFSA correctly. The services are similar to a tax return service.

"We have a professional financial adviser who looks over the FAFSA application in order to try and make it as perfect as possible before it gets filed," Alexander said.

The company understands the FAFSA is an important financial document and takes its work seriously, Alexander said.

"The idea of this being a scam is completely unfounded," he said.

Signs a scholarship is a scam:

- "The scholarship is guaranteed or your money back."
- "You can't get this information anywhere else."
- "I just need your credit card or bank account number to hold this scholarship."
- "We'll do all the work."
- "The scholarship will cost some money."
- "You've been selected by a 'national foundation' to receive a scholarship" or "You're a finalist" in a contest you never entered."

money and not try and rip off the students who are trying to get an education," Martin said. "It's just one of those things that students have got to be informed about before they sit there and throw their money to something."

The Federal Trade Commission's Web site has information for students and parents regarding the recognition of scams and lists companies that have been found guilty of scamming students, Moeder said.

The FTC Web site has a list of six signs that a scholarship is a scam.

K-State's financial assistance office also answers questions and offers free help in filing the FAFSA.

Try these excuses to get a deadline extension

Illustration by Donnie Lee | COLLEGIAN

Since only two weeks of classes remain, it's likely students are swamped with end-of-the-semester papers and projects. So here are some excuses to use to get extensions on those papers and projects. Be warned, though: they might not work.

I have to floss my cat.

I've dedicated my life to linguini.

I want to spend more time with my blender.

The president said he might drop by.

The man on television told me to stay tuned.

I'm staying home to work on my cottage cheese sculpture.

It wouldn't be fair to the other beautiful people.

I'm building a pig from a kit.

I'm teaching my ferret to yodel.

I'm going through cherry cheesecake withdrawal.

I'm planning to go downtown to try on gloves.

My crayons all melted together.

I'm trying to see how long I can go without saying yes.

I left my body in my other clothes.

None of my socks match.

I'm having all my plants neutered.

I never go out on days that end in "y".

I promised to help a friend fold road maps.

I'm trying to be less popular.

I'm writing a love letter to Richard Simmons.

Aviation program grants alumni status, honorary degrees

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While November is known as Aviation History Month, the K-State-Salina aviation and technology program has something else to celebrate this month.

This November marks the 40th anniversary of K-State-Salina's program, though its affiliation with K-State only dates back to 1991. The program began as Schillings Institute in 1966 and became the Kansas College of Technology before the merge with K-State took place 15 years ago.

In celebration of the 40-year milestone, President Jon Wefald and K-State are honoring those who graduated before the merge with degrees from K-State and are granting them official status as K-State alumni.

"It was a very nice gesture of recognition," said Ken Bernard, an aviation professor at K-State-Salina who graduated from the aviation and technical college in 1977.

"It probably means a lot to the others to have an official degree from Kansas State University."

Having been involved with the K-State-Salina program for more than 30 years, Bernard also noted the influence of K-State's 15-year affiliation with the aviation and technical program.

"Merging with K-State was very important for this institute," he said. "Before the merge, we were a technical college and could only offer two-year degrees, which didn't meet the needs for a lot of airline industries. Since the merge with K-State, we are able to offer internships to our students and have gotten a great deal more of recognition from major airlines."

One student who said he benefited from his education at K-State-Salina is Kevin Giefer, who is now a test pilot for Cessna Aircraft Company.

"I really could have gone about anywhere after with what I learned at K-State-Salina," said Giefer, who received his degree in December 2000.

"I have friends from this program that have gone on to do air ambulance, commercial flights, corporate flights, test flights, just about anything. This is truly a great program."

To further celebrate its 40th anniversary, K-State-Salina had a ground-breaking ceremony on the site where its new student center will be located and gave tours of the campus.

MOMENTS IN HISTORY OF THE K-STATE-SALINA AVIATION AND TECHNOLOGY PROGRAM

■ The first classes were taught in fall 1966. There was a department head, four faculty members and a secretary.

■ In 1969, the Kansas Legislature dissolved into the State Education Authority, creating the State Board of Education and changing the College's name to Kansas Technical Institute.

■ The Professional Pilot program was approved in 1986. May 1987 saw its first graduating class of seven students, all of whom earned Associate of Technology degrees in Professional Pilot.

■ In 1989, contracts were signed for CAA training with Air Service Training in Perth, Scotland. Property was traded with the Salina Airport Authority so a new training facility could be built to support this training contract.

■ K-State and Kansas Technical College merged in 1991. The department had 60 aircraft and a faculty and staff of 31.

■ In 1992, K-State-Salina aircraft were used for traveling on K-State athletic, recruiting and university business trips. Helicopter pilot and aviation maintenance training also were offered in 1992.

■ An avionics degree was added, and a Federal Aviation Administration certified avionics repair station was approved in 1992.

■ In 1995, K-State-Salina signed contracts to support NASA atmosphere research.

■ In 2005, Steve Fosset took off and landed in Salina for his record-breaking round-world flight in his Global-Flyer. K-State-Salina aviation maintenance students worked on the aircraft before take-off, and pilot students helped operate the central command station.

Buffet offers quiet dining in Union

Zach Snyder, senior in management, talks with Regan Thorsell, Wamego, Kan., resident, as they have lunch at the Blue- mont Buffet Monday afternoon in the Blue- mont Room of the K-State Student Union.

Overlooking Bosco Plaza is a dining option available to students, faculty and staff, and the public.

The Blue- mont Buffet is on the second floor of the K-State Student Union in the Blue- mont Room and is open daily from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Tina Griffin, food director for the Union, said the Blue- mont Buffet began in 1963 as a meeting facility and catering service. It has since evolved into a fine dining establishment with a quiet atmosphere, setting it apart from other food services on campus, she said.

The daily buffet consists of a soup and salad bar, assorted side dishes, generally two entrees and one carved meat. The buffet also offers a wide selection of desserts. The all-you-can-eat buffet costs $7.25. Around holidays, specialty buffets are served for $7.95.

"The specialty buffet has a broader menu and is set up in the Union Ballroom with reserved seating," Griffin said. "The menu variety depends on the holiday. The next specialty buffet will be served on Dec. 5."

In past years, the Blue- mont Buffet was not frequented by students. Recently, more students have become aware of the buffet.

"Historically, it has been marketed towards faculty and staff, but this year we are trying to get more students involved," Griffin said.

To advertise the buffet, mass e-mails have been sent to the student body. Fliers also circulate around the Union and on campus.

Last week, the Blue- mont Buffet offered a discount day when students received $1 off their meals by presenting a student IDs when paying. The next discount day will be in February.

Zach Snyder, fifth-year student in management, said he enjoys eating at the Blue- mont Buffet.

"It's something nice to do, and it has better food than the (Union) Food Court," he said. "It isn't really expensive either."

Students often eat at the Blue- mont Buffet now, but because of its location, it has remained unnoticed by some.

"I didn't even know there was food on the second floor of the Union," said Ashley Klein, sophomore in bakery science. "I have had classes on that floor and just thought there were only classrooms and a ballroom."

Reservations can be made for the daily buffet and specialty buffets, but walk-ins also are welcome. A daily menu can be found on the first floor of the Union and outside of the Blue- mont Room.

Richards' rant

Calling names sends nation into a frenzy, but U.S. public needs to quit pouting, move on

Perhaps the only thing more clamorously ignorant than has-been actor Michael Richards shouting "nigger" in the middle of a comedy performance is the incessant way the U.S. public pouts around like a spoiled child on a school-yard.

JONAS HOGG

In their own unendearing way, the nation's easily offended saw a steaming plate of old brown and began shoveling with both hands and demanding more, and more they got. I realize the slander in question has a well-deserved reputation of pain and abuse, and we're all supposed to be grindingly indignant about the actor formerly known as Kramer tossing out the most unspeakable of all English vulgarities. But lo and behold, standing guard on my torch and pitchfork is Ms. Margie Barnes, my kindergarten teacher.

I'm entirely too damaged to remember any exact quotes from those far away years, but I'd venture her words went something like "people who call names are stupid, and people who get upset when they get called names are even stupider." Clearly, not everyone had the stupendous benefit of a Ms. Barnes.

In good order, the NAACP, the New Black Panthers and the undoubtedly soon-to-be-founded Federal Office for the Prevention of Hurt Feelings are whooping that Richards needs to get tossed in the clink, although last I checked neither being tacky nor being a moron was an arrestable offense.

Without a doubt, we're going to see new hate speech legislation tacked on to our already idiotic hate crime laws, which imply there is a form of speech we should be concerned about other than free speech (and also that there is such a thing as a "love crime," but that is for another column).

If we had 10 brain cells left to bump into each other in the grand republic, we could expect events to continue about like this: Richards would get his underwear sued out from under him, some high school dropout judge would award a bazillion dollars in emotional damages, and everyone would move on with their miserable lives.

But being totally enmeshed in the great train wreck, we'll drag this damned thing on longer yet. Now Jesse Jackson is involved, and race counseling, sensitivity training — oh yes, and more to come.

My most unhumbled and elitist advice would be for everyone to get over the whole mess. Instead of relegating a washed-up old fart to the catacombs of Internet fandom where he belongs, we've turned him into a household name — go us. More people now know the name Michael Richards than ever did during the Seinfeld years.

Being that crisis management teams have been brought on by all sides, the whole bleeding affair will drag on, step after unholy step. Now we'll endure a grieving period, a touching appearance recanting his past misdeeds and then the most important of all steps, the comeback — my wager is a movie with at least two big-name black actors. I simply can't wait. Perhaps another stereotype-busting neurotic white cop meets sassy black cop film.

Meanwhile, we'll have more news reports afraid to even quote our now-overblown tirade of galactic proportions. The "N-word" they call it, pandering to obsessive hand wringers incapable of hearing harsh language without launching their colon out of their nose.

Sez me, we need to see about overthrowing the government and installing Ms. Barnes as Grand Pubah.

Maybe she can smack some sense into this infernal place.

Cities boost 'cool' factor to lure college graduates

The number of baby boomers in the workforce is decreasing.

According to an article published by The New York Times, by 2012, for every person gained, two will be lost in the workforce.

This is fantastic news for us college-educated young people. Top many of us go to college, practically owe the government our firstborn child in student loans, and then venture into the real world proudly bearing our newly earned degrees, only to get jobs in something completely irrelevant to what we spent so much time studying. Not to say a college degree isn't worth it, but wouldn't it be nice to go into an area involving what we studied intensely for at least four years?

According to the article, several U.S. cities are beginning to respond to the decline in the workforce. Desired demographics, those in the 24- to 34-year-old age range who have college degrees, apparently are drawn to hip, lively cities.

A few sites are doing everything they can to become cooler. Some of the cities mentioned in the article were Atlanta; Memphis; Lansing, Mich.; and Portland, Ore.

Examples of the attempts to become trendy include renovated downtown areas, boosted night life and more activities overall. In Lansing, a trolley was created to commute people from bar to bar. In Portland, one company has given employees an opportunity to watch concerts during lunch and to play sports every day, according to the article.

Since the number of working baby boomers is shrinking, and the number of young people also is smaller by comparison, like it or not, we are the economic future. But this is good news. We soon will be in great demand. We — at least somewhat — are educated and hopefully capable of carrying out life after the baby boomers' successful generation.

Seeing as though we will be in such high demand and cities across the United States want us to come find jobs, live and boost their local economy, shouldn't we insist on living in the best conditions?

I say we require higher pay, four-day weekends, bar districts around every corner, arcades in all offices, full gyms and swimming pools provided by companies, and happy hours from noon to 5 p.m. Instead of malls and shopping centers, stores could come to us at work and home. Our trendy age group seems satisfied when our environment includes food and entertainment.

If worst comes to worst, and no city or company will quite meet these outrageous stipulations, we probably still can make bank by going into geriatrics, seeing as how a huge age group of baby boomers will enter that stage in the near future.

TO THE POINT

An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

University should work to ease transfer from community college to K-State Community colleges carry a stigma.

Many university students think attending a community college is like graduating to the 13th grade. Some think students at community colleges can't attend a four-year university.

These beliefs are wrong. Many students choose to attend community colleges and benefit from their experience.

In fact, the members of the editorial board who attended community colleges — one-third of the board, in fact — said it was a good decision. They said they received more benefits from their first two years of higher education than traditional four-year university students do.

The advantages include smaller class sizes, lower costs and proximity. There is more student-professor interaction, possibly because most community college professors aren't required to do research.

Community college also is a great place to try a major because if it doesn't fit the student, he or she easily can find a more appropriate one.

Some people might say there are not as many opportunities at community colleges as at K-State, but that is not true. The editorial board's transfer journalism students were able to attend conferences and meet people in the industry just as well as people from other institutions.

With the advantages provided by community colleges, more should be done to encourage community college transfers to attend K-State.

Ah, the Collegian. Shouldn't it be "Democrat to propose reinstating the draft"?

Your headline, "Democrats to propose reinstating draft," was about as accurate as one saying, "Republicans send sexually implicit IMs to underage pages" would be. Only one Democrat is proposing reinstating the draft.

What went wrong?

The women's volleyball team didn't live up to hopes, recent seasons' records

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's volleyball team entered the 2006 season with high expectations and had its sights set on making a run at a Big 12 Championship. Instead, the Wildcats struggled throughout the season, suffering long losing streaks and close conference defeats.

After starting the season with an 8-1 record and ranked in the Top 25, the Wildcats (12-18, 4-16 Big 12) took a free fall, going more than a month without a win and losing matches they controlled. Here's a look at what went wrong:

LACK OF DEPTH

The Wildcats had just two regular outside hitters early in the season with senior Sandy Werner and sophomore Jenny Jantsch. The two weren't able to generate enough offense (neither player had a hitting percentage higher than .168), which forced coach Suzie Fritz to move junior Angie Lastra, pictured right, from libero to outside hitter on Oct. 7.

Lastra provided a spark for the Wildcats and finished the season with 187 kills, but it wasn't enough to turn the team into a consistent winner.

5-GAME MATCHES

Though the Wildcats finished with just four conference wins, they certainly had their chances to earn more. The Wildcats played six five-game matches, and they came up on the losing end every time. In a three-match stretch against Texas A&M, Iowa State and Texas Sept. 22-30, the Wildcats lost all of their matches 3-2.

That stretch was part of the Wildcats' 10 straight losses.

FILE PHOTO

YOUTH

It's no surprise the majority of top-tier teams in women's volleyball have a solid core of seniors.

The Wildcats had just one senior — Werner, pictured left — and could have benefited from more experienced players. Perhaps a battle-tested group could have found ways to win some of the tight matches.

However, the Wildcats got a chance to play some of their talented underclassmen, who proved the future should be bright for K-State volleyball.

A trio of middle blockers — freshman Kelsey Chipman and sophomores Megan Kroeker and Megan Farr — all had productive seasons.

With 12 of 13 players returning to next year's team, the Wildcats might be talking about "what went right" come November 2007.

TOUGH COMPETITION

The Big 12 Conference has never been short on quality teams, and this year was no exception. Nebraska (No. 1), Texas (No. 8), game pictured right, and Oklahoma (No. 13) all were in the CSTV/AVCA Top-25 Poll, and three other teams — Colorado, Missouri and Iowa State — are receiving votes.

As Fritz often said throughout the year, there's no easy match in the Big 12, and with the emergence of so many underclassmen in the conference, it's only going to get tougher.

Staff Reports

FBC | Alamo Bowl appearance is early speculation for K-State

Nothing will be official until Dec. 3 after the Big 12 Championship game, but early speculation by ESPN.com contributors Ivan Maisel and Mark Schlabach have coach Ron Prince and K-State heading to San Antonio, Texas, to play in the Alamo Bowl.

The Wildcats' opponent in the game scheduled to take place at 3:30 p.m. Dec. 30 would be Iowa, which already has accepted an invitation to play in the game.

Since appearing in the 2001 Alamo Bowl, the Iowa Hawkeyes have made four straight January bowl game appearances, including the 2003 Orange Bowl, 2004 Outback Bowl, 2005 Capital One Bowl and 2006 Outback Bowl.

Texas native and senior quarterback Drew Tate passed for 2,349 yards and 12 touchdowns in 2006 to lead Iowa to the No. 2 passing offense in the Big 10. He is now No. 2 at Iowa behind Chuck Long in both career total yards with 8,143 and career total passing yards with 8,018. Tate's 59 career touchdown passes ranks No. 9 all-time in Big 10 history.

VOL | K-State setter Spiegelberg named Big 12 Player of the Week

K-State setter Stacey Spiegelberg was named Big 12 Player of the Week in an announcement by the conference Monday afternoon. Spiegelberg guided the Wildcats to their first two-match win streak in Big 12 play this season with wins over Texas Tech and Kansas to close out the season. She is the first K-State athlete to earn player of the week honors since Sept. 13, 2004.

For the week, Spiegelberg tallied 95 assists (13.57 apg), 18 digs (2.57 dpg), 10 kills (1.43 kpg), nine service aces (1.29 sapg) and seven blocks (1.00 bpg). K-State hit .309 for the week with 113 kills, registered 27 total team blocks and tallied 24 service aces.

In Wednesday's 3-1 win in Lubbock, Texas, Spiegelberg dished out a match-high 58 assists, tallied 10 digs, recorded a match- and career-high five service aces, tallied five kills on a .556 hitting percentage with zero attack errors and added in four blocks.

It was the 11th double-double of the season for the junior from Overland Park, Kan., and the 20th of her career.

During the match, she became just the third player in the 32-year history of K-State volleyball to record a quadruple-triple for a season, surpassing triple digits in assists, digs, blocks and kills.

In Saturday's 3-0 win over Kansas in Ahearn Field House, Spiegelberg dished out 37 assists, registered eight digs, jumped into the attack herself with five kills on a .500 hitting percentage, dropped in four service aces and aided the defense with three blocks.

FBC | Iowa State hire Texas coach Chizik to take over football program

AMES, Iowa — Texas assistant head coach and defensive co-coordinator Gene Chizik has been hired as Iowa State's coach.

Cyclones associate athletic director Steve Malchow told The Associated Press Chizik accepted the position. He will replace Dan McCartney, who resigned this month after 12 seasons.

A news conference was scheduled Monday evening to introduce Chizik, who arrived in Ames earlier in the day.

Chizik came to Texas before the 2005 season, and the Longhorns won a national championship in his first season. By the end of the 2005 season, Chizik's teams had won 28 straight games dating back to his years at Auburn, where he was defensive coordinator for three seasons.

In 2004, the Tigers went 13-0 and finished the season ranked No. 2. The Tigers had the nation's top scoring defense and ranked fifth in total defense that season, and Chizik won the Broyles Award as the nation's top assistant coach.

Fans need guidebook on rushing-the-field etiquette

With college football entering its final stretch, a lot of exciting games are in store, and the number of times fans rush the field is sure to be high.

After K-State ended its regular season with a 39-20 loss at Kansas, Jayhawk fans stormed the field and tore down the goalposts. The action received a lot of criticism regionally.

However, something I read on a message board later that week struck me. "There's no guidebook on rushing the field, so it doesn't really matter," were the words of one Kansas fan.

It's true. There is no guidebook on rushing the field. And I'm not claiming to be an expert on the subject, but some sort of rulebook needs to be made. Without one, this situation could get out of hand.

We might have fans storm the field after a win over Illinois State. Students might tear down the PowerPoint projector after getting an A on a test. Who knows? The mailman could tear down a mailbox after making all his deliveries on time.

Clearly some rules are necessary, so here is a rough draft of your first official "Guidebook for Rushing the Field."

Rule 1: Thou shalt rush the field when an unranked team upsets a Prolific but twisted trio uses restraint to craft eerily beautiful experience

"The Air Force"

Grade: A-

Album review by Mark Sibilla

"Human Animal," the second Sub Pop-released album by the highly prolific Michigan trio Wolf Eyes, is a perfect example of a noise rock band bringing method to its mayhem.

"Human Animal" is much more cinematic and subtle than its predecessor, "Burned Mind," in that it builds tension throughout the album, rather than in each track, before abrasively releasing a sonic assault on unsuspecting eardrums.

With "Human Animal," Wolf Eyes manages to construct its own savage world in which I can become immersed for the entirety of the album's 33-minute run time.

A pounding bass, metal clanging and a variety of gong rolls and hits begin album-opener "A Million Years." It slowly lulls me into the figurative forest of sound created by Wolf Eyes.

An ever-impending sense of doom is felt with each thud of the ponderous bass. A short reprieve is offered in the whistling of wind before I am sideswiped by atonal saxophone skronks and synthesized screeches — Wolf Eyes has cut out the lights, and there is no turning back.

I pass the "Lake of Roaches," which contains hissing warnings of what is to come. I ignore these forewarnings and trudge through the muck.

Then my ears are filled with sounds of tortured animals and intense static feedback — perhaps I should have heeded the roaches' advice.

In "Rationed Rot," thundering tribal drums slowly sound an approaching apocalypse. I foolishly travel onwards, but then I hear the sound of a beating heart.

Never has a sound that should be reassuring sounded so terrifying.

The drums slowly crescendo while a disembodied voice spits fractured beat poetry about sewage, death and bile. I am soon unable to distinguish if the heartbeat I hear is something in the distance or the sound of my own heart ringing in my ears.

A series of metallic screeches and scrapes joins the drumming, suffocating me with noise.

I want to scream in horror, but I don't want to be noticed by those performing this horrible ritual.

I then am dropped into an unnerving silence before all hell breaks loose on "Human Animal." A fury of noise is released, and each percussive beat that pounds my impending annihilation sounds like heads violently crushed against a wall.

Sharp, high-pitched squeals are emitted everywhere around me. It's the shrieks of thousands of tortured souls creating a choir to Death himself.

Finally, mechanized beats and scrapes join the cacophony — each one sounding like metal pistons mercilessly pounding bags of flesh and guts into mush.

"Rusted Mange" is even more grotesque. I am barely conscious, and I feel dizzy as I smell rotted flesh and hear the drumming that sounds like a sacrificial ceremony.

But these are no ordinary drummers.

They pound too hard and too fast to be human. With the FACTS ABOUT WOLF EYES

Where it started

Ann Arbor, Mich.

Who's in the band

It started as a solo project of former Nautical Almanac band member Nate Young. Aaron Dilloway joined in 1999, and John Olson joined in 2000.

What it is about

Featuring electronic, industrial and experimental music, this noise band has released more than 150 recordings under labels like Bulb Records and Sub Pop Records. Today, the band has released its own material.

tempo ever increasing, a voice, dressed in static, chants the prayers of the damned as a sea of shrieks envelops everything. I pass out and fall face first into the muck.

I awake to the soothing sound of rain before an entrails-rumbling bass reminds me of where I am — "Leper War" has begun. I regain my composure and wipe the vomit from my chin. But soon the saxophone returns, and I am affrighted immediately.

All around me are the sounds of giant beasts laboriously breathing. Do they know I'm here?

Then, in the distance, I hear "The Driller." The sounds of high-pitched drills, mechanical saws and other torture devices begin to rev. I flee once I hear the first of the heavy thuds, which quicken with each hit. All sorts of noises rise around me as I desperately run, knowing no matter how fast, I won't escape. The last thing I remember before my capture is the ephemeral yelp of that sinister sax.

I was not harmed by Wolf Eyes, and the sounds I heard produced were simply commonplace for this triumvirate. Had my hallucinations all been brought on by the swirl of uncommon sounds bored into my head?

Perhaps, but this question wasn't to be answered as the band treated me to the final song in its oeuvre, a cover of No Fucker's "Noise Not Music."

The band begins somewhat conventionally before piling sound upon sound, literally turning the music into a barrage of noise. It was like 100 hardcore bands playing at once.

When the last note of "Human Animal" fades away, I am dropped back into reality.

My journey was harrowing but entirely worthwhile. I cannot wait to immerse myself again into the perfect, noise-rock world created by this twisted trio.

NEWS BRIEFS

Pam Anderson divorces Kid Rock after 4 months

NEW YORK (AP) — Pamela Anderson has filed for divorce from Kid Rock after less than four months of marriage, the actress' publicist said Monday.

Anderson's (top right) representative said the former "Baywatch" star filed for divorce last week but would not comment on the reason or any particulars of the divorce. The split was first reported by People magazine.

"Yes, it's true," Anderson wrote in a brief statement on her Web site. "Unfortunately impossible."

The relationship between Anderson, 39, and Ritchie, 35, has been a turbulent one since they became engaged in 2002. They broke up the following year, but then reunited and embarked on a tour of wedding ceremonies this summer.

They were wed in late July near St. Tropez, France, and again at a courthouse in Beverly Hills, Calif., on Aug. 3. They tied the knot a third time in an Aug. 17 ceremony in Nashville, Tenn.

Earlier this month, Anderson's spokesman, Tracy Nguyen, confirmed Anderson recently suffered a miscarriage. The pregnancy was not believed to be far along.

Anderson has two sons, Brandon, 10, and Dylan, 8, from her marriage to rocker Tommy Lee. Ritchie, a Michigan native who owns a condo in Nashville, has a 13-year-old son, Bob Jr.

Alleged sex tape, release upsets actress Simpson

Los Angeles (BANG) — With so much talk about celebrity sex tapes about to be exposed, we're surprised nothing has been revealed yet (except for Screech's threesome, but nobody cares to see that).

Jessica Simpson has been another victim in the latest trend of celebrities who allegedly have a sex tape.

The stunning blonde has been left reeling by rumors that her sex acts have been caught on camera and might leak onto the Internet.

The alleged X-rated home movie is said to show the "Dukes Of Hazzard" actress and ex-husband Nick Lachey engaged in many sex acts.

A source told Britain's Daily Sport newspaper, "Jessica is horrified her name and 'sex tape' are being mentioned in the same sentence. She's always been a girl of high morals and principles."

According to reports, the tape does exist and has fallen into the hands of the individuals responsible for leaking the Pamela Anderson and Tommy Lee sex video. It has been claimed they are threatening to leak the tape if Simpson does not pay an undisclosed sum of money to keep it out of the public domain.

The 25-year-old star has always prided herself on making men wait for sex.

She once said, "I play hard to get. If you turn sex down for a couple of days, it makes it better."

Lachey is now dating MTV presenter Vanessa Minnillo, while Simpson allegedly has been dating singer John Mayer.

'Sex and the City' inspires Lohan's personal life

Los Angeles (UPI) — When it came to Lindsay Lohan's sex life, her biggest inspiration came from the lives of four women in one of television's biggest TV series — "Sex and the City."

The 20-year-old actress insists the hit show, which focused on the love lives of four single women in New York, taught her to avoid settling down with one guy. Lohan admits she is quite happy seeing lots of different people.

"My mom is going to kill me for speaking about sleeping with people, but I don't want to put myself in the position where I'm in a monogamous relationship right now," she stated in a recent interview with Elle magazine. "I'm not dating just one person. 'Sex and the City' changed everything for me, because those girls would sleep with so many people."

Top-10 opponent.

Some could argue this should be increased to a Top-five opponent. But if an un-ranked team manages to beat a Top-10 team, it qualifies as a rather large upset and grants a rushing of the field.

However, it should be noted a once-prominent team (within the last two years) should not rush the field. If Florida State had managed to beat Florida last Saturday, it would discredit the team if fans had rushed the field. Not too long ago the Seminoles were national champions, and storming the field after an upset would say they were inferior to Florida.

Rule 2: There shall be a rushing of the field when a team breaks a long losing streak against its rival.

I'll go ahead and set the mark at 10 straight years without a victory. A school breaking a long losing streak to a bitter rival is grounds for storming the field. Notice the use of the word "long." A two- or three-year losing streak is not nearly long enough. Missouri fans didn't storm the field Saturday after snapping a three-game losing streak to the Jayhawks.

Rule 3: Thou shalt rush the field after an (incredibly rare) exciting finish.

When the excitement of the final seconds of a game takes over and students feel like rushing the field after a "Hail Mary" victory or a last-second touchdown, it is appropriate. When California beat Stanford on the famous "The band is on the field!" play, it was more than justified to rush the field.

These rules are just a starter. Obviously they need some tweaking, and more could be added. Kansas fans shouldn't be at fault for rushing the field after their win over K-State. There wasn't a guidebook. Now there is, so take notice.

MARSHALL | Mechanical engineering student to earn master's, possibly doctoral, degree at Oxford Biomedical engineering is a field Kitten has been involved with at K-State.

She now is performing research on the use of elemental signatures for stand-off bomb detection and the use of neutron activation to analyze the wear rate of the acetabulum due to a hip prosthesis.

During her guaranteed two years abroad, Kitten will earn her master's degree and, if granted a third year, her doctorate.

Kitten said she wants to pursue research into prosthesis at the Rehabilitation Institute of Chicago.

Already a scholarship winner at K-State, Kitten is a National Merit Scholar, a Kassebaum scholar, a Presidential Scholar and a recipient of the National Clare Boothe Luce undergraduate scholarship.

Since 1986, K-State has been one of the top state university producers of Marshall scholars.

Beaten only by the University of California at Berkeley and Arizona State University, K-State has had 10 Marshall scholars in the past 20 years.

The Marshall scholarship provides 40 students each year the funding to study abroad.

The scholarship includes university fees, cost of living expenses, an annual book grant, a thesis grant, research and daily travel grants, and fares to and from the United States.

The value is estimated at about $70,000 and is spread over two years of study with a possibility for a third, according to Media Relations.

Gallery reception closes student's thesis exhibit

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Elizabeth James has worked with clay for more than 20 years, but only her artwork from the last three years was showcased in the William T. Kemper Art Gallery the past two weeks for her Master of Fine Arts thesis exhibit.

For the end of the exhibit, people gathered to congratulate James and view her artwork during the closing reception Monday night.

James' exhibit, "Clay Ground," was in the K-State Student Union gallery, which features work from students, faculty, visiting artists and alumni.

"I'm very inspired by the outdoors," she said.

James, graduate student in ceramics, said she worked on her pieces for three months but spent three years researching before creating the work.

Since the exhibit is now closed, James will sell some of her artwork and exhibit other pieces, she said.

In her artist's statement, which hung on the wall among the different works, James wrote, "My forms are multiple assemblages that combine contrasting clay bodies, glazes and surfaces that are not direct representations of this environment but rather borrowed elements or essences."

James said she plans to continue teaching ceramics in the future and exhibiting throughout the world.

Yoshi Ikeda, professor of art, said he has been James' ceramics teacher for three years.

"She used to do functional things," Ikeda said, "but now she's making art. That means she's grown quite a bit."

He said James used to make a lot of pitchers and bowls but now makes all types of ceramics.

Amarida Small, graduate student in ceramics, said she attended the reception because James is like a mentor to her and she wanted to support James' work.

"We love Liz," Small said. "She's a really great teacher. A lot of people that came tonight were students of hers."

Small said she liked seeing the show and how all of James' artwork came together. Small said it gave her a sense of pride to see what kind of work the Department of Art can produce.

Community colleges offer lower tuition, living costs

By Austin Apple
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As tuition at traditional four-year colleges rises, more students are looking to save money by attending to community colleges, living at home and participating in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

When students enroll at a community college, they cut significant costs, said MargE Shelley, director of enrollment management at Johnson County Community College in Overland Park, Kan.

Community colleges have a lower cost and offer morning, night and weekend classes, Shelley said.

ENROLLMENT NUMBERS

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said he hasn't seen any change in enrollment at K-State since enrollment at community colleges has increased.

"We have experienced record enrollment over the past several years," Bosco said.

K-State has partnerships with some community colleges, Bosco said.

"We take pride that students pick K-State over community colleges in the state," Bosco said.

Enrollment at community colleges like JCCC and Highland Community College in Wamego, Kan., has risen in recent years. JCCC has had a 2.2-percent rise in enrollment from fall 2005 to fall 2006, Shelley said. Current enrollment is 19,000.

"At Highland Community College, enrollment has actually been down a little bit this year," Registrar Alice Hamilton said.

However, college enrollment for the state of Kansas as a whole has been down from previous years, Hamilton added.

LIVING AT HOME

Some students choose to live at home because it saves them the cost of room and board.

"It saves me rent, which is usually $400 or so," Russell Wohler, freshman in biology, said.

Although students save money living at home, it isn't always easy.

"The hardest part of living at home is that you are still living with your parents, so it feels just like high school," Wohler said.

High school graduates want to leave home after graduating, and their parents want them to move out, too, Wohler said.

Sometimes students attend a community college before transferring to a traditional college.

"I went to Highland Community College to get my general education stuff out of the way," Wohler said.

Wohler had a 1.0 grade point average and was forced to drop out of K-State five years ago, he said.

Wohler has lived with his parents in St. George, Kan., 6 miles east of Manhattan, since birth, he said.

COSTS OF LIVING

There also are costs students would pay if living in a residence hall, fraternity, sorority or scholarship house.

Residence halls have dining centers that cost a student up to $2,956 per semester, depending on the meal plan.

To live in a fraternity costs about $2,250 a semester, while sorority living costs about $2,430.

Smurthwaite, a leadership/scholarship house for women, charges $2,500 per semester for room and board, while Smith Scholarship House for men and Clovia 4-H House for women cost $1,800 and $1,250 per semester, respectively.

TUITION AND FEES

According to the K-State Web site, K-State's tuition for a Kansas resident is $172.50 per credit hour, while out-of-state students pay $497 per credit hour.

At Highland, tuition is $45 per credit hour for a Kansas resident and $95 per credit hour for an out-of-state resident.

In-state students pay $127.50 more per credit hour to go to K-State than they would pay at Highland. Out-of-state students pay $402 more per credit hour at K-State.

However, K-State's other fees add to the cost. Students pay a $302 privilege fee for amenities like the use of Lafene Health Center and Peters Recreation Complex if they are enrolled in more than 12 credit hours.

Students who are enrolled in fewer than 12 hours pay $71 for the first credit hour and $21 per credit hour through the 12th credit hour.

At Highland, students pay a campus fee if they take courses on campus. If students take courses at a regional site, they pay a regional fee.

ROTC

Nate Beeman, sophomore in business administration pre-professional, said he saves money on tuition through the ROTC program at K-State.

"I am on a four-year scholarship through the Army. It pays for everything and then gives me a stipend each month for room and board," Beeman said.

Although most students attend community colleges to save money, some students just aren't prepared to attend a four-year college right after high school.

"Some students aren't ready for a traditional college yet," Hamilton said.

Jewelry suits almost everyone

Jewelry is a gift that can be given to anyone, guy or girl. Some popular items include necklaces, rings, bracelets and earrings.

When giving advice to customers who are buying for others, Allison Zuk, sales clerk at Krystallos Inc., suggests necklaces.

"I would say people can mostly stick to necklaces," she said. "They are fairly inexpensive."

Depending on the recipients, there can be different tastes for different age groups, Zuk said, but colorful jewelry is always good.

"It depends on the season," she said. "Darker colors like brown are better for the winter, and bright colors are more for the summer."

With regular, casual jewelry, sterling silver is a good pick, Lindsay Berry, Krystallos Inc. sales clerk, said.

"You can do what you want with it," Berry said. "You can dress it up as much as you want."

Why to buy:

Necklaces: "I didn't know what to buy you, but you're a girl, and most girls like necklaces."

Bracelets: "You already had a watch, so this will balance the other side." Bracelets can give the illusion of long arms.

Rings: Whether or not it's for engagement or marriage, these can symbolize friendship or faith. They can draw attention to your fingers and hands.

Earrings: "You already have the matching bracelet and necklace, and I'm not ready to give you the ring."

SALT AND PEPPER SHAKERS

Vibe mini magnetic salt and pepper balls are more conversation piece than utensil. Squeeze the tops of these unusual shakers to grind salt and pepper into your food. When you're finished, stick them on the fridge. Target, $9.99

CARAMEL CORN BODY WASH

Temptations Crazy Caramel Corn three-in-one body wash, bubble bath and shampoo brings the decadent smells of butter, rich caramel and vanilla to the bathroom. According to the bottle, it's "highly addictive." At the least, it has fewer calories than the real thing. Check out the Wickedly Hot Chocolate and Spicy Gingerbread scents, too. Bath & Body Works, $5 for 4 ounces

IPOD SWEATERS

These knitted "sweaters" keep any size of iPod cozy and protected. The package has four sweaters in different colors, so you can give them all to one person or spread the joy to several friends. Wal-Mart, $4.88

NFL FLASK

This stainless steel flask is just the right size for a stocking ... or a pocket. It's a good option for sports fans who already have too many T-shirts for their favorite teams. They are available for any NFL team and for many other sports leagues. GuntherGifts.com, $25

REINDEER POOP

A plastic reindeer that dispenses candy pellets from its hind end? What more could a kid want? This inexpensive novelty item would be a good filler gift, even for the older people on your shopping list. Wal-Mart, $1.88

Top it off with ribbon

Already have plain shirt boxes? No worries. A few dollars will dress them up:

1. Instead of curling ribbon, use silk ribbons, tie in a bow and top with a holiday sticker or seal. Wal-Mart, 97 cents for a 5-yard spool

2. Pair a printed ribbon with a textured strand of miniature tree garland and top with a miniature ornament. Hobby Lobby, 99 cents for garland, $1.99 for 22 snowflake ornaments

3. Tag away. Don't forget to make sure the gift gets to its recipient. From a classic tag stamped for the holidays to an affordable engraved ornament strung on a sheer ribbon, the gift is sure to get noticed. Wal-Mart, 99 cents for 12 blank tags, 97 cents for an engraved brass ornament

WRAP IT UP

Use stylish, affordable packaging to draw all eyes to your holiday gifts

This holiday season, package presents with style. Anyone can buy a nice bag and a bow, but these interesting packages will leave plenty of funds for the gifts inside. Get your list, check it twice, and wrap up your holiday shopping with a festive but frugal touch.

1. Take-out box — The classic Chinese food take-out boxes have gone glam. This blue and white snowflake box is further embellished with a turquoise beaded handle. Not only a great find for its price, but there is a large selection of prints, and this box is easily reusable. Hobby Lobby, $1.27

2. Latched Canister — This canister is a fun way to package any small gift. Lined with a decorative paper and topped with a bow, this is likely to be one of the first gifts opened. Hobby Lobby, 99 cents

Tip: For a small increase in price, larger canisters are available and make great gift basket containers.

3. Brown paper box — This will add variety to all of the department store boxes under the tree. The boxes come in all shapes and sizes and are easy to decorate or decoupage. They can be reused to hold keepsakes for years to come. We decorated a round box with paper doilies and a green ribbon. Hobby Lobby, $1.97 for large box, 97 cents for small box, 25 cents per sheet for paper

4. Paper sacks — A twist on the brown bag lunch sacks. Paper gift sacks are now available in a variety of prints and colors. The fun bags make wrapping a synch and are a great buy. These are perfect for the person who needs to wrap a lot of small gifts quickly. Hobby Lobby, 5 for $1

Tip: Fold over the tops of the bags, punch two holes and string with curling ribbon. Use brown or white lunch bags with a fun tag or ribbon.

5. Mason jar — A simple mason jar might be sitting in your cupboard right now. Fill the jar with tissue paper or shreds and line the lid with tissue paper or cotton fabric. Tie a ribbon around the lid and top with a holly sprig or another embellishment for a festive twist on Grandma's preserves. Hobby Lobby, $1.27 for the jar, 25 cents for silk holly

Fashioning themed baskets can make typical presents more attractive, personal

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Your gift need not be the biggest or the most expensive, but it always should be the best-looking. One way to ensure it gets the attention it deserves is to put it in basket form and surround the main gift with complementary items that follow a central theme. Gift baskets are often easier than wrapping and more fun for the recipient.

Tips

- Stuff the bottom of the container with extra tissue or newspaper so the gift basket looks fuller.
- Use items with different colors for contrast, or stick with a certain color scheme for a harmonious look.
- Use tissue paper, metallic shred, or curling ribbon to finish off the basket. Final touches bring the whole thing together.

Movie Buff Basket

- Theater-style microwave popcorn bucket
- Blockbuster video, $1.89
- Milk Duds and Junior Mints in theater-style boxes
- Wal-Mart, 88 cents
- 20-oz. Pepsi
- Wal-Mart, $1.09
- "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest"
- Wal-Mart, $15.87

Add-ons:

- Student movie tickets
- Varney's Book Store, $5.50
- Best Buy or Blockbuster gift certificate
- "The Great Movies," Roger Ebert
- Barnes and Noble, $29.95

Book Worm Basket

- "A Man Without a Country," Kurt Vonnegut
- Barnes and Noble, $22.75
- Hershey's Cacao Reserve mildly spiced drinking cocoa
- Wal-Mart, $2.88
- Black mug
- Target, $2.99
- Millstone Colombian blend coffee
- Dillon's, $1
- Radina's Coffeehouse and Bakery gift card
- Ghirardelli dark chocolate squares
- Wal-Mart, 88 cents

Less obvious movies make better gifts

By Brendan Praeger
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Any grandma can pick up "Cars" or the latest Disney movie as an unoriginal gift, but you probably want your gift recipients to know you spent more than five minutes picking out a DVD. Here are some choices to let the people on your shopping list know you care (unless they read this, too; then your secret is out).

For aspiring musicians

"This is Spinal Tap" (1984)
Their band will totally make it one day. When that day comes, they'll need to avoid the dangers of fame mixed with an inflated ego. This film will show them how to walk the fine line between stupid and brilliant.

For the hard of hearing

"Ben-Hur: A Tale of the Christ" (1925)
Don't be scared away by the fact that it's a black-and-white silent film. It's a story about betrayal, revenge and Jesus with some amazing action scenes. It's only available in a boxed set with the Charlton Heston remake, but it's worth the extra effort.

For potheads

"Blow" (2001)
Inspire your friends to turn their legally questionable hobby into a profitable business endeavor ... or a hefty prison sentence.

For those experiencing hair loss

"Find Me Guilty" (2006)
This story about a mobster who defends himself in the longest mafia trial in U.S. history is Vin Diesel's first non-bald role. It's also his funniest (except for maybe "XXX," but this time you'll be laughing with the movie, not at it).

For future parents

"Raising Arizona" (1987)
This movie could be an excellent resource for those dealing with the financial strain of parenthood. When they're not robbing convenience stores, breaking out of prison or kidnapping babies, the characters in this movie are usually dysfunctional but always endearing.

Book selections can be tailored to personalities

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Books make great gifts; they are entertaining, portable and require no batteries. Pick a book that fits the recipient's interests, and it's sure to be appreciated. To make the gift even more personal, inscribe a message on one of the first pages in lieu of a card. Here are some good options if you don't know where to start.

For your roommate
"I am Charlotte Simmons"
Tom Wolfe

Charlotte, the naive, over-achieving protagonist, doesn't stay that way for long. As she makes her way through her freshman year of college, she encounters parties, cheating and date rape — things foreign to her in her sheltered, small-town life at home. Realistic, funny and candid, this book will prove to be a nostalgic account of freshman year for some, a warning for others.

For the sports fan
"The Blind Side: Evolution of a Game"
Michael Lewis

This brand-new book from the author of "Moneyball" and "Coach" is a great gift for any football fanatic. The story follows a disadvantaged black teenager who is taken in by a white evangelical family and eventually becomes an agile 300-pound left tackle for Ole Miss. Lewis' insight into the workings of college football combined with his ability to craft true stories into a readable narrative make this book a great gift.

For the kid in your life
"The Night Before Christmas" pop-up book
Robert Sabuda

Sabuda, a master of paper engineering, has combined his artful and elaborate pop-ups with the classic Clement C. Moore poem "Twas the Night Before Christmas." Children are sure to be enchanted when eight reindeer jump out of the book or when an entire village materializes on the page. You also might have a look at his other books, like Sabuda's spin on "The Wizard of Oz."

For the person who doesn't like to read
"A Photographer's Life: 1990-2005"
Annie Leibovitz

Legendary portrait photographer Annie Leibovitz showcases her best work from the past 15 years. It includes photos of Michael Jordan, Johnny Cash, Nicole Kidman and Nelson Mandela. Leibovitz also has photos of her family and friends and the siege of Sarajevo during the 1990s. This coffee-table book is a little more pricey than a novel but worth the expense. It is at once intensely personal and universally appealing.

For your most opinionated friend
"Freakonomics"
Steven D. Levitt, Stephen J. Dubner

Did Roe v. Wade cause the sharp drop in crime in the 1990s? An award-winning economist and a New York Times writer believe it did, and they go to great lengths to prove it in "Freakonomics." Levitt's claims, which some call radical, are nonetheless thought-provoking and well-supported. Despite its subject matter, the book is easy to read and has short chapters that need not be read in order.

Adopted families get necessities, gifts

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The holiday season is a time for giving. But some families don't need gifts, they need the bare essentials.

The Flint Hills Breadbasket runs the Adopt-A-Family program during the holiday season to assist these families.

Natascha Phillip, executive director of the Flint Hills Breadbasket, said her organization works hard to match families with donors.

"We want it to be a good experience on the donors' side and family's side," she said.

The response of donors is strong every year, Phillip said, with groups, individuals and clubs expressing an interest in being involved in upcoming years.

"We get nothing but positive comments," she said.

The program provides warm clothing and necessities for each person in a household. Toys are requested for the children.

To qualify for the program, families fill out a detailed sheet of information about their household and income. Last year, the program provided gifts for 719 families.

Phillip said the sign-up for this year is not complete. An emergency sign-up will be available Dec. 6 for families who forget to fill out their paperwork for the program.

Even with a good start to the season, the program is in need of individuals and organizations willing to adopt a family over the holidays.

"This program is so much different," Phillip said. "We give you details about the family. We let you know why they're going through problems. It lets the donors feel like they know the family."

While the Breadbasket's main goal is to feed hungry families, Phillip said the organization wants to help families that don't have money to spare, especially during the holidays.

"There's more than just food securities," she said. "We want them to know your kids are taken care of."

Emily Lehning, assistant dean of student life and coordinator of New Student Services, said New Student Services has been involved with Adopt-A-Family for years. Campus tour guides and office workers have shared in the tradition even before Lehning started at her position five years ago.

"They look forward to it every year," she said.

The enthusiasm for the program has carried over each holiday season. Students sign up for gifts they want to buy for the family, and during finals week, gift wrap is available in the office for students to wrap their presents.

This year, the office's adopted family is a single mother with two children.

"This is something our office does together," Lehning said. "As far as the team aspect, that's what makes it so special and unique for us. Sometimes, students pool money together and go shopping for the gifts together."

Putnam Hall, which has been a part of the Breadbasket's program before, will receive its family during the first two weeks of December, said Kelly Eilert, hall governing board president and junior in psychology.

To encourage hall residents to participate, a tree filled with ornaments with the needs of the family is placed in the lobby of Putnam. Students take an ornament, purchase necessities and gifts, wrap them and place them underneath the tree.

The hall sponsored an eight-member family last year. Eilert said residents are looking for a similar family this year.

"We try to find the biggest family we can," she said.

Being a part of the Breadbasket's Adopt-A-Family has been a way for the hall to do something out of the ordinary to celebrate the season.

"We wanted to do something that was away from the norm of Christmas," Eilert said, "and it's a way to give back."

The bolero-style Kimchi and Blue Pom-pom Cropped Sweater for $68 is a trendy alternative to traditional winter sweaters. For men, the flannel shirts make for a warm layer over thermal tees or graphic T-shirts. Items for the home, including dishes, pillows and art, are eclectic and fun, but the holiday items are the best. Sephora is the mecca of beauty supply. Boasting hundreds of upscale brands like Clinique, L'Occitane and Shu Uemura, Sephora is the place to shop for high-maintenance types. Not all its products are expensive, though. The site has categories for gifts less than $25, $25-$50 and more than $50, making shopping on a budget easy. One of the best holiday items is Philosophy's The Ski House, a set of three products that comes in a cute, house-shaped box and features marshmallow, hot cocoa and peppermint scents. Perhaps the best gift idea, though, is the Sephora Fragrance Gift Certificate for $50. The recipient gets a box of 10 perfume samples and a certificate for a bottle of his or her favorite one, taking the guesswork out of giving.

Police caution against jury scam

By Austin Apple
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department is warning citizens to be aware of a scam involving jury duty.

According to a news release, the perpetrator calls the victim and tells them they were summoned for jury duty but failed to show.

After the perpetrator explains to the victim there is a warrant being issued for their arrest, the perpetrator asks to verify some information to have it cleared, said Patrick Tiede, detective and Manhattan Riley County Crime Stoppers coordinator.

"Since the victims do not want to be arrested, they give the scammer their social security number and date of birth," Tiede said.

So far 11 states have been hit with this scam, including Oklahoma and Colorado, Tiede said.

"Do not give out your social security number or any other information over the phone unless you know who you are giving the information to," Tiede said.

Those who feel they have been a victim of this scam are asked to call the RCPD at (785) 537-2112.

Now more K-State students will be able to get their information for class from podcasts.

K-State launched the world's largest course-podcasting initiative with Tegrity Campus this fall, which offers the capability to convert about 6,000 class recordings to podcasts for students.

The Tegrity system is not new to K-State, said Scott Finkeldei, assistant director of the Office of Mediated Education. Professors have been able to use Tegrity to videotape themselves, capture their audio and show annotated slide shows since 1999. Each year, K-State pays $32,000 to use the Tegrity system.

For the past several months, the university has had the option to convert these recordings into podcasts almost automatically, Finkeldei said. More than 140 professors are taking advantage of the podcasts, which are multimedia files users can access on the Internet and play back on Mp3 players like an iPod or a personal computer.

Just because a course offers podcasts does not mean K-State will start requiring them in the future, Finkeldei said. Students will have the option to access podcasts and listen to them on their computers.

Some universities are veering away from calling the recordings podcasts because of recent threats by Apple that the company owns the name and also to clarify that an iPod is not needed to access them, Finkeldei said.

"We also discussed calling them Cat Casts, but at the moment we are still calling them podcasts," Finkeldei said.

Podcasts have an important role in education because they are another way to help students learn, said Beth Unger, vice provost for academic services.

"Our goal is to provide an environment where our students can learn in a way that is easiest for them," she said. "We have provided mechanisms for students to prepare for class, in many cases preview what the lecture is going to be and then review what the professor said so the need to take copious notes is diminishing."

Bradley Matlack, senior in mechanical engineering, goes online once a week to take notes from a video lecture his professor puts on the Internet for his aerodynamics class.

Matlack said his instructor, Terry Beck, lectures in front of a video camera and writes notes that are shown along with the lecture. The lectures are optional to students in the class and give them more insight on their homework, Matlack said.

"I think it's just more convenient," he said. "Once people start using it more widely it can either be if you need extra help you can go in and see the instructor per-

Senator Sam Brownback considers presidential campaign

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the dust from the 2006 mid-term elections begins to settle, political analysts are beginning to ponder the next event that will shape the United States' political make-up: the 2008 presidential election.

Although the election is more than 23 months away, candidates for the nation's highest office already have begun or will begin their campaigns sometime in the next two months. One candidate who has been on the presidential radar is none other than K-State alumnus Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan.

"I think there is room, on the Republican side, for somebody that's a Republican candidates for 2008 presidential nomination:

Newt Gingrich - Former Speaker of the House
Gov. Mitt Romney - Mass.
Rep. Duncan Hunter - Calif.

Brownback

full-scale conservative, that's an economic and fiscal and social conservative," Brownback told ABC's "This Week" television program Sunday.

Brownback, who replaced Bob Dole as Kansas's senator in 1996, has been a staunch supporter of social conservatism during his two terms.

A former student body president at K-State, he is a vocal opponent of abortion rights and embryonic stem cell research, having received a 100-percent ranking on his voting record from the National Right to Life Committee. Brownback supports Second Amendment rights, receiving accolades from the National Rifle Association.

"The young congressman from Kansas has championed the cause of social conservatism in the upper body of the congress," said Doug Patton, political analyst for news service The Conservative Voice. "This has made him a hero among so-called values voters, who find precious few senators from either party willing to fight for their issues."

If Brownback does choose to throw his hat into the presidential ring, he will face tough opposition from within his own party. He would join a potential Republican field including Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.; Gov. Mitt Romney, R-Mass.; former New York mayor Rudy Giuliani; former Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich; and Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif.

"Brownback has the same problem as any senator or congressman: a lack of executive experience," said

Edward Morrissey of Captain's Quarters, a well-known political blog ring. "Legislators reach compromises, and those come back to haunt candidates on the presidential trail. On the other hand, Brownback doesn't appear to have too many of these waffling points on the resume."

One potential problem for Brownback might be the media attention garnered by his Republican opponents. McCain, Gingrich and Giuliani all have received front-page attention from sources ranging from the New York Times to CNN, while Brownback has been relatively quiet, waiting in the shadows.

Wichita State student performs 1-man play

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A group of about 15 people gathered in the K-State Student Union's Little Theatre for "The Night Larry Kramer Kissed Me."

The Obie Award-winning solo play was presented 8 p.m. Tuesday to a group of about 30 people from K-State's Queer Straight Alliance (QSA) and Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators (SHAPE).

"The Night Larry Kramer Kissed Me" is a colorful adaptation of author David Drake's coming of age as a gay man: from cheerful recollections of a 6 year old infatuated with "West Side Story" to his first male kiss, an event which was crushed by his father, to touching recollections of friends and loved ones who died from complications of HIV/AIDS.

Wichita State University student Brad Thomison was the sole actor in the performance, which placed the unnamed character in the backdrop of historical events, from then-President Ronald Reagan's refusal to mention AIDS to the Thousand Points of Light, a demonstration aimed at bringing awareness to the disease in the early 1990s.

Couched within the play is raw language, which Thomison said was part of the writer's original intent — shocking people into paying attention.

"Part of this piece of work is to inspire conversation and action," he said. "This play is really in your face and really raw because nothing else was being done."

Since the play's off-Broadway release in 1993, the winds of social change have moved AIDS into the national spotlight, but with improvements in treatment leading to increased life span and quality of life for those HIV positive, some expressed concern that attention and funding have been diverted away

Library offers book sale, treats at holiday bazaar

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can do more than check out books in the library. Through this afternoon, they also can purchase them.

The Friends of the KSU Libraries's holiday bazaar ends today. It takes place on the second floor of Hale Library and offers more than just books. The tables are filled with items like jewelry, ornaments, cookies and other novelties.

"We've been having our holiday bazaar for about ten years now," said Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean at Hale. "We have better books and gifts here than we do at our larger book sales."

McCulloh said everything they have was donated, and they do not use any library books. They also have people who make items to be sold.

"One of our most interesting items is a cow costume for a dog," she said. "I'm amazed it hasn't sold yet."

She said the turnout has been good so far, and the sale has made close to $2,000.

Many people came to take advantage of the sale, and not all were students.

"I'm a librarian, so I'm very interested in books, which is why I am here," said Mohan Ramaswamy, assistant professor at Hale Library. "I came to look for Christmas presents. I also liked the cookies, but decided not to buy them, although they would be good to give to people."

Ramaswamy said he was looking specifically for children's books.

"That's what Christmas is all about, giving presents to kids," he said.

Others just came to browse and see what the sale offered.

"I haven't ever been here before, so I'm not really looking for anything in particular," design, said. "I really don't from what I can see, they have Phil Kocher, senior in graphic know what it's all about, but a little bit of everything."

Dancers perform in the spotlight

By Josh Rouse
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The stage of Nichols Theatre was alight with talent last night as 67 dancers tapped, turned and twisted to music from the past and present.

From the early sounds of jazz and the '80s pop of Michael Jackson and Prince to the modern day, hip-hop beats of the Ying Yang Twins and Justin Timberlake, dancers moved to the rhythms of an entire century's worth of music. Donations also were taken in the forms of food and money to go to the Flint Hills Breadbasket and the K-State Dance Foundation.

"It wasn't too hard to choreograph," Jenny Boswell, sophomore in open option, said. "We had class time to do it: two weeks before the break."

The dancers choreographed their dance moves, and some got class credit for routines. Angela Hubler, director of the women's studies program, gave credit for student Saylor Ann Burgess' choreography about domestic violence against women.

"Because women's studies is an interdisciplinary program, we have students who do a variety of different things from theatre to dance to art to history and English," Hubler said. "Any of those, from a feminist perspective, can be women's studies."

Burgess is a senior in dance and women's studies. The routine, Freedom Behind Bars, was described in the program as an emotional journey into the reality of domestic violence. It tells the story of women who were imprisoned for killing their assailants, yet said they felt more free behind bars than under the tyranny of the violence.

"The best part is that people leave maybe being touched by that piece and learning something and being more aware of domestic violence," she said.

[Con]federate flags

Keep freedoms by debunking the arguments, promoting the practice of self-censorship

I've heard many arguments in support of the confederate flag in my lifetime. Some were among the stupidest ideas I've ever heard in my life, while the rest were only half-truths among whole lies.

The strongest argument in support of the stars and bars was that the Civil War really had nothing to do with slavery before its end. It can even be argued one of America's most revered Republicans, Abraham Lincoln, had no intention of freeing the slaves in the 1863 Emancipation Proclamation.

In his book "Forced Into Glory: Abraham Lincoln's White Dream," Lerone Bennett argues the proclamation is carefully worded to only free slaves in the rebel Southern states.

The problem is, these states were not under Union control at this time, and therefore the proclamation freed no one.

However, the person who feeds you this argument, appearing to understand and care about race-related issues, fails to recognize one key point. Even if Lincoln didn't intend to attach slavery to the Civil War, today's Americans do.

Therefore, presenting it still appears racist.

The other arguments, at least the ones worth mentioning, all seem to defend the personal use of the rebel flag. We've all heard people argue them before, trying just as hard to convince themselves as they are trying to convince you.

"It's patriotic to remember history," they say, or, "it's good to rebel against authority," usually followed by some random quote from a Revolutionary War figure. Oh, and my favorite, "But I actually believe in a confederacy for our government."

Let me debunk these three arguments in order.

One: people will remember the brutal history of the Civil War with or without that damn flag. It was by far the deadliest war in our young nation's history and should only be remembered with the respect such a war deserves.

Two: while our founding fathers, being the slave-owning racists they were, probably would agree with the rebel spirit of the South, it does not mean we should use their quotes in that manner.

We've progressed rapidly throughout the past 200 years, but we're nowhere near where we could be. During this progression, we've begun to translate the words of these men in more significant ways.

Expanding the use of the term "men" to all races and sexes is slowly moving us away from our history of denying rights to a brighter future of supplying them to all.

Along with this progression, we have come to shun physical violence. Well, unorganized violence at least. We've replaced bloody wars over trivial issues with peaceful protests and a stronger democracy. The idea of being a happy-go-lucky rebel excited for bloodshed belongs in the past.

Third: If you really believe in a confederacy, there are other ways to show it. Simple phrases like "Kansas first, American second" (without the flag, of course) would be a clearer way to get your point across.

In the end, we're lucky to live in a country that allows such freedom of speech. The idea of Nazism is so horrible that Germany has forbidden the production of pro-Nazi materials.

Fighting ideas in such ways only gives them credit they don't deserve.

It's better to allow them to exist, while educating the masses to prove them wrong and explaining why they are so horrid.

In the United States, the confederate flag is a symbol of an idea nearly as horrible as the Holocaust.

While we thankfully didn't go as far as genocide, we still took the freedoms and erased the history of an incredible number of people.

There is no reason to support such a horrible thing.

Plastic surgery, fashionable trend gives new lengths to perfection

Extreme perfectionists, take note. Just when you thought you had fixed every horrendous flaw on your body, a new one comes skipping down the block, ready to point and laugh at your hideous imperfection. The other day, I stumbled upon a report stating one of the United States' fastest-growing plastic surgery procedures is eyelash transplant surgery.

While reading this, my forehead wrinkled in confusion. We all have things we don't like about ourselves, but it must take some sincere self-loathing to be that picky.

According to the report by MSNBC, the procedure originally was developed to help burn victims. However (and I'm assuming a little bit here), after these victims raved about their fabulous new pillow-like lashes, unburned Americans quickly jumped on the bandwagon.

The procedure is relatively simple. The doctor takes hair follicles from the hairs on your head and transplants them onto your eyelid. If it ended there, I might be tempted to chalk it up to something else to roll my eyes about, but no. The best part: the side effects.

Since the new lashes are just regular old hair, they grow like hair. That's right, they grow. A lot. You have constantly have to trim them or else run the risk of buying extra shampoo for your lashes. Also, since hair normally grows down, good old gravity pulls your new lashes down, too. It would be wise to invest in a quality eyelash curler.

Without proper maintenance, you could end up looking like Cousin It from the eyelashes down. All this to be able to seductively bat your eyes? I have enough to worry about in the mornings without battling an eyelash 'fro.

I'm all for doing whatever it takes to raise your self-esteem. If this means going up a couple cup sizes or sucking a few Big Macs out of you, then more power to you. But for the life of me, I can't imagine getting personal satisfaction out of looking in the mirror and thinking, "Wow, my eyelashes look especially voluptuous today."

What will you gain from this? Money? Fame? Saturday evenings filled with love-struck suitors? The only advantage I can think of is saving a little bit on mascara.

It just seems so frivolous. Maybe that's indicative of what mainstream society has become: so caught up in our own lives and petty problems, we're forced to turn to things like eyelash transplant surgery just to avoid worrying about the bigger picture.

Perhaps it's easier to focus on what we can do to improve ourselves rather than put forth the effort to make a difference in something meaningful.

It's not like we're not urged in this direction. Look at all the plastic surgery related shows on TV. "Nip/Tuck," "Dr. 90210" – all programs like that do is promote the thought that something is wrong with all of us. If you can't think of anything, then obviously you haven't taken a hard look in the mirror lately.

It sounds like a horrible excuse for turning down a date.

"Sorry, I can't go out with you tonight, I have to transplant some lashes."

Laughable or not, I think it is a frightening eye-opener of the lengths society can reach to avoid dealing with larger issues. If thinking about this makes the hair on your arms stand on end, worry not. Just transplant them to your chin – I hear that will be hot next season.

TO THE POINT

An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Wii game system encourages students to exercise instead of just vegging out

It's indisputable today's children are more obese than older generations. Some speculate modern technology is to blame, including video-gaming systems.

It's important for children to be active and spend hours outside riding bikes or participating in role-playing games. However, today's children spend all their time indoors plopped in front of a television set watching cartoons or playing video games.

Nintendo seems to want to change this. With the Nintendo Wii, children are forced to exercise a bit while enjoying their video games. Plus, the Wii attracts users because its controllers are shaped like a TV remote and a nunchuck.

The Wii is a step forward in video gaming. We applaud Nintendo for making a gaming system that incorporates a bit of exercise. While it doesn't replace the exercise children get from playing outside, it does encourage them to be less lazy.

The Wii is good for older players, too. It makes video games more physically interactive and gives users something to do instead of aimlessly staring at the television.

Check out the Nintendo Wii; it just might be good for your health.

sonally or for those that don't you can go online and do it at your own speed."

In the College of Business Administration, assistant professor Michael Chilton uses podcasts in his course Applications of Data Models in Business. However, not all students are excited by the ability to listen or view lectures online.

"Why would you go to the lecture twice?" Joe Olerich, senior in management information systems, said. "It's doubling the work."

Matlack said he felt similar to Olerich.

"If I were to watch one of the lectures online and just understand it completely I probably would then skip class because there is no point in going twice," Matlack said.

While some worry students will be less likely to attend class if they can receive all of their information online, Unger said the opposite is true.

"It turns out that using this, the students actually attend class more," she said. "One of the things is they know they don't have to scribble notes."

Unger said professors at other universities report students who are in courses with podcasts are more involved in class discussions.

"I think you develop a better relationship with your professor this way and it allows you that chance to do that," she said.

from treatment and vaccine research.

The final segment of the play puts Thomison's character in the year 2018, reminiscing on a long and apparently violent fight between factions disagreeing about the rights of homosexuals involving gay marriage, adoption and hate-crime legislation.

"Get prepared. It won't be pretty, but it's good here, you'll see," Thomison's character said.

Tuesday night's performance is part of a week-long series of events designed to bring awareness to K-State's first collaborative world AIDS week, said Josh Reed, sophomore in food science.

Reed, who has lived his entire life in Manhattan, said many people consider themselves insulated from HIV and AIDS, but when a friend and mentor was recently diagnosed, the reality of the situation hit home.

"If one person in a community like this has AIDS it effects everybody," he said.

As part of the week-long events, today participants will run red string between the lamp posts in the area between Waters Hall and Hale Library as an interactive display on HIV's community effect, Reed said.

Thursday's Acting on AIDS in Bosco Student Plaza will shift focus to children in Africa, either orphaned by or suffering from HIV/AIDS.

Jason Dockins, president of QSA, said the event is more about raising awareness and funds, and people are encouraged to "adopt" an orphan and keep him or her in their thoughts.

An AIDS walk will begin at 4:45 p.m. Friday at Bosco Student Plaza, ending with a vigil and a donation to the national AIDS quilt, and the final event, Artists for AIDS Awareness will be held at 6 p.m. Saturday in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

"To have something that's really raw and edgy brought to a place like this - I think the shock value itself can be an incredible instructor," Reed said.

announced or denied his candidacy, Brownback said, "My wife and I and our family have spent a lot of time thinking about this, praying about it, and really considering whether we could bring a message to the country that needs to be discussed."

Although the senator did not have an official announcement for the Collegian, Brownback told "This Week," "We're very close with announcements."

Recent actions from the senator suggest a presidential run is likely. In past months, Brownback has made several trips to Iowa, New Hampshire and other states, holding early caucuses or primary elections. On "This Week," moderator George Stephanopoulos joked that Brownback already should be considered a presidential candidate.

"Well, I can tell from that smile that 'you're in,'" Stephanopoulos said. "That's not very coy at all."

Brownback simply stated, "We'll see."

Commercial workouts

A typical 30-minute television show includes 22 minutes of programming with six minutes of national advertising and two minutes of local ads. This means a grand total of eight minutes of commercials (although some half-hour blocks can have as much as 12 minutes of commercials). Each commercial's length averages 10 to 30 seconds, depending on the television station's purchase of advertising time.

In other words, throughout the course of an evening, let's say about three programs or three hours, you could total a 48-minute workout when performing exercises for the 16 minutes of advertising during each hour-long program.

Keep in mind that getting 30 minutes of accumulated exercise is recommended by the American College of Sports Medicine for health benefits.

So, here's a thought: instead of making excuses, try multi-tasking.

Begin your workout with a warm-up during the introduction of your first program with some side-to-side shuffles across the room. This will elevate your heart, warm your muscles and prepare your body for movement.

During the rest of the commercials you can use home equipment like exercise balls, dumbbells, bands or your body weight.

Try these basic exercises for your commercial workouts:

FOR STRENGTH

- Push-ups
- Sit-ups (on a ball or floor)
- Lunges
- Bicep curls
- Overhead tricep extensions

FOR CARDIO

- Stairs
- Jump rope (if ceilings are high)
- Shuffles
- Squat jumps
- Moving lunges (around the room)

You can vary the number of repetitions, exercise speed and number of sets to change intensity.

Be sure to have controlled movements with good posture: straight back, feet hip-width apart and knees slightly bent, with tight abdominal muscles, when performing all exercises.

The gaming system that will get you off the couch, in the action

By Trent Scott
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

By now you probably are used to me telling you to get off your butt and go to the gym. You're expecting me to tell you to eat right and be active. I'd never condone wasting your life away by playing video games, right?

Right — but with shades of gray.

Now, don't get me wrong. I still hate the thought of people spending countless hours glued to their televisions or computers, and I can't believe people would actually spend up to $10,000 on a Playstation 3.

However, today I will go against all of my preconceived and usually justified notions about the relationship between video game playing and physical fitness.

Two days ago I played Nintendo Wii for the first time, and I absolutely loved it.

In case you haven't heard of it, the Nintendo Wii is a new gaming system that allows you to physically take part in the action via two wireless controllers. One resembles a TV remote, while the other controller is a device Nintendo calls the Nunchuck. I found both to be very easy to operate.

To use the remotes, you simply hold them in your hands and manipulate them as if they were the piece of equipment depicted in the game. It's actually quite intuitive.

Each Nintendo Wii comes with a

Scott moves his controller while participating in the bowling challenge of the Wii sports game. The system uses two wireless, motion-sensitive controllers.

Wii sports disc, so you can practice and play without having to spend another $50 on a game.

The Wii sports disc offers five different sports experiences including bowling, tennis, golf, baseball and boxing. I played every one except golf, and I found each of them to be quite enjoyable and challenging.

My favorite activity was boxing, and the highlight of my bout was a knockout early in the second round.

To box, you simply hold one controller in each hand and throw punches at your opponent as if you were hitting a punching bag. You can even dodge blows by moving side to side.

It was a workout, too. I actually started to break a sweat.

The Wii sports disc also allows you to calculate your Wii skill level. This entails bowling, a home run derby and a singles match in tennis.

I sadly had the Wii skill level of a 66 year old. I then tried to redeem myself, but failed after aging to a shameful 78 years.

In any case, I found the Nintendo Wii to be an exciting new spin on the predictability that has become video gaming. It's fun, it's fit, and for $250, Nintendo Wii is by far the best bang for your buck and belt size of any gaming system on the market.

1-MINUTE DRILL

Staff Reports

FBC | Campbell, Figurs named 1st team All-Big 12 Conference

K-State placed a total of 11 players on the 2006 AT&T All-Big 12 football teams, conference officials announced Tuesday. Selections were made by the Big 12 coaches, who were not permitted to vote for their own players.

Sophomore defensive end Ian Campbell and senior wide receiver/return specialist Yamon Figurs headlined the list of K-State honorees as first-team selections. Senior linebacker Brandon Archer and sophomore defensive back Marcus Watts were named to the second team.

Seven Wildcats also received honorable mention consideration, including senior linebacker Zach Diles, junior defensive end Rob Jackson, senior wide receiver Jermaine Moreira, freshman running back Leon Patton, senior place-kicker Jeff Snodgrass, senior offensive lineman Greg Wafford and senior defensive back Kyle Williams.

The Big 12's top tackler among defensive linemen with 60 stops, Campbell tied the K-State single-season record for sacks with 11.5 on the year and heads into the bowl season ranked fifth nationally in that category. He also led the Big 12 in tackles for losses with 16.5, a figure that ranks 19th in the country.

Figurs, who was selected as the league's top return specialist, finished the season ranked second in the Big 12 and 16th nationally in punt returns after averaging 12.2 yards on 20 attempts.

Archer, K-State's leading tackler for the third straight season, ranked sixth in the Big 12 during the regular season with a career single-season best 97 tackles.

In just four starts, Watts collected 19 tackles, including a pair of sacks and three interceptions.

FBC | Stoops unanimous choice for AP Big 12 Coach of the Year honors

NORMAN, Okla. — In a season of turmoil, Bob Stoops was still able to mold a championship-caliber team at Oklahoma.

Even after the dismissal of their starting quarterback and an injury to their record-setting running back, the Sooners managed to go 10-2, 7-1 in the Big 12. It was good enough for Oklahoma to win its fifth Big 12 South title and a berth in the conference championship game Saturday — and, on Tuesday, Stoops was named The Associated Press' Big 12 coach of the year.

Stoops was a unanimous choice for the honor, which he also won in 2000 and 2003. He becomes the first three-time winner in the conference's 11-year history. Only former Colorado coach Gary Barnett had also won twice. Stoops is the second straight unanimous selection, following Texas' Mack Brown.

Stoops

FBC | Peterson out for Saturday's Big 12 Championship game

NORMAN, Okla. — No. 8 Oklahoma will be without star tailback Adrian Peterson when it faces No. 19 Nebraska in the Big 12 championship game Saturday.

Peterson, the 2004 Heisman runner-up, has missed six weeks after breaking his collarbone Oct. 14 on a touchdown run against Iowa State.

"Adrian is not going to play," Sooners coach Bob Stoops said Tuesday at his weekly news conference. "Without being too technical, he's close. He could be cleared to play, but each week that passes the likelihood of it recurring is less and less."

Peterson, the nation's No. 2 rusher at the time of his injury, initially was expected to miss six weeks.

Oklahoma (10-2, 7-1 Big 12) has won all six of its games without Peterson, who set an NCAA freshman record in 2004 with 1,925 yards rushing. He had 935 yards and 10 touchdowns in six games this season and is 150 yards shy of Oklahoma's career rushing record, held by 1978 Heisman Trophy winner Billy Sims.

He possibly could go for that record in a bowl game.

"The bowl game is a very likely possibility and very likely to happen," Stoops said. "Talking to Adrian, he absolutely wants to play. And by that time, that's another four weeks of healing that they're really sure that he'll be fine and there's a really small chance of anything happening to it."

Men's basketball team looks to improve record on the road

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The last time the K-State men's basketball (4-1) team went on the road, things got ugly.

The Wildcats will look for a stronger performance tonight at California, after losing on the road to New Mexico 78-54 on Nov. 21.

"I'm looking forward to it," senior forward Cartier Martin said.

"We hit a bump in the road in Albuquerque, but I know we're a good team. We've been fighting through some mental mistakes, but I know we can go to Cal and be productive."

In its last road trip, K-State shot less than 30 percent from the field against the Lobos. The Wildcats' luck wasn't much better from the free throw line, where they made eight of 15 attempts.

"We're going to have to play a whole lot better," coach Bob Huggins said.

California has started the season with a 5-1 record. The Golden Bears won the Great Alaska Shootout with a 78-70 win over Loyola Marymount on Nov. 25.

California is led by freshman forward Ryan Anderson, who averages about 20 points and more than eight rebounds a game.

In the Great Alaska Shootout championship game, Anderson scored 15 points and hauled in 12 rebounds against Loyola Marymount.

"I saw them on TV the other night," senior guard Lance Harris said. "It's going to take a lot of heart to go out there and play hard."

Huggins said he looks forward to playing tougher competition like California but would rather play them in Manhattan.

"I'd just as soon play about five of them in a row at home," Huggins said. "If we're going to be legitimately what we want to be, then you have to play those people and you have to figure out ways to win."

Getting 'Real'

THE CAST

Cast member Tyrie (Ty) Ballard (pictured at bottom) hails from Omaha, Neb. Ty, 23, was born on Dec. 7th, 1982. This is Ty's second reality show appearance, as he was one of the frat brothers of Tommy Lee during "Tommy Lee Goes to College," featured at the University of Nebraska — Lincoln, where he recently graduated.

Nicole (Colie) M. Edison, 22, was born and resides in East Brunswick, N.J. Colie (pictured top right) recently completed her degree in communications from Tulane University in New Orleans. Recently, she made it about halfway through the next Real World/Road Rules Challenge "The Inferno 3" before being sent home.

Partygirl Jenn Grijalva, 22, lives in Martinez, Calif., while studying at Diablo Valley College in Pleasant Hill, Calif., while raising her child. Jenn (pictured left) was recently an Oakland Raiderette, cheering for the Oakland Raiders of the National Football League for about four years. Today, she still teaches dance and choreography.

Southern belle Brooke J. LaBarbera, 24, was born and still resides in Nashville, Tenn., where she also completed her degree in communications from Belmont University. Brooke (pictured lower right) ventured away from Nashville to try life out in Los Angeles when she was recruited to be on the Real World via MySpace — a first for MTV's reality shows.

J. Davis Mallory IV was born on Aug. 23, 1983, in Marietta, Ga. Davis (pictured right) earned a business and medicine degree from Stetson University in May. As he stated on the first episode, he wants to become a plastic surgeon. On the Denver cast, Davis is challenged by other cast members for the fact that he is gay and a Christian.

Stephen Michaels, 23, comes from Sacramento, Calif., but is currently attending Howard University in Washington, D.C. Stephen (pictured top left) plans to graduate in spring 2007, with the intention to attend law school and get a career in public service. This devout Christian lives by the word of the Lord and is challenged by fellow Christian and gay roommate, Davis.

Heartthrob Alex Smith, 22, is the youngest cast member of this season on "The Real World: Denver." Straight from Houston, Texas, Alex (pictured middle) attended Arizona State University. A swimmer on the ASU swim team, Alex's charm and over-confidence has immediately become the envy of the female cast members. Colie and Jenn (pictured top right) are also fans of Alex's.

"The Real World: Denver" COURTESY OF MTV

MTV launches season 18 of 'Real World,' pushes reality TV past previous limits

Within the premiere of MTV's "The Real World: Denver," seven cast members pushed reality TV expectations to the limits.

The seven cast members — four guys, three girls — dived into their $3.3 million house with little less than what their mothers gave them. In their first day in the house alone, two girls (Brooke and Jenn) made out, with Ty wanting to get in on the action; a guy and a girl (Colie and Alex) made out, too. Even better, Colie hooks up with Alex, expressing her love for him to other cast mates. Alex freaks out, decides that commitment isn't exactly for him and sleeps with fellow party-girl roommate, Jenn. What exactly will the relationship hold? The roommate struggles don't stop here, however. Davis also struggles to get along with his roommate Stephen, who argues Davis cannot be a true Christian and gay at the same time. While they both call it a truce on the first episode, Davis' sexual insecurities are likely to nip him in the bud, as Davis has clearly expressed he has no problem with making out and/or sleeping with women.

Over the top, overdramatic — that is what this season of "The Real World" will likely be. You don't want to miss it. Watch the show at 9 p.m. Wednesdays on MTV.

Reality timeline

A look at the era that changed television

1948 — Talent shows

The first TV talent search shows like Ted Mack's Original "Talent Show" and Arthur Godfrey's "Talent Scouts" launched, featuring amateur competitors and audience voting. Similar shows like "American Idol" and "America's Next Top Model" became widely popular in the 2000s.

1948 — TV prank shows

Based on the popular radio prank show, "Candid Microphone," Allen Funt's "Candid Camera" is the granddaddy of the reality TV genre, broadcasting unsuspecting ordinary people responding to pranks. Similar prank-based shows later came and include "Punk'd," "Boyz n the D" and "Jackass."

1950

1965 — Dating shows

Created by Chuck Barris, "The Dating Game" was the first dating reality show that featured one single bachelor or bachelorette and three single people of the opposite sex. The bachelor would interview the singles for a date — and potential relationship. Famous contestants include Suzanne Somers, Farrah Fawcett and Michael Jackson.

1970

1973 — A family affair

The 12-part reality series "An American Family" followed the lives of a nuclear family going through a divorce. Countries like the United Kingdom and Australia immediately followed up with similar family crisis shows.

1991 — Talk shows

Talk shows like "The Jerry Springer Show" and "Ricki Lake" presented audiences with real-life drama in a talk-show format.

1999 — 'Survivor'

The popular reality series is based on the successful Swedish show "Expedition: Robinson," where contestants are put in a remote location to compete for cold hard cash. Through a series of challenges, contestants are eliminated until there is one survivor. The first season peaked as the No. 3 show in the country with 52 million viewers.

2000

2003 — 'Simple Life'

Big city heiress Paris Hilton and celebrity friend Nicole Richie left for a simpler life in 2003, where they gave up their cell phones and credit cards to live a month in Altus, Ark. The series has taken the girls on a road trip back to Los Angeles, to internships and to motherhood (sort of).

2003 — Rich teens

"Laguna Beach: The Real Orange County" — this American reality TV show documents the lives of several wealthy teenagers from Orange County in California.

2005 — Playboy

The series follows the lives of Playboy mogul Hugh Hefner's blonde girlfriends: Holly Madison, Bridget Marquardt and Kendra Wilkinson. Celebrities like Hefner, Paris Hilton and the women of Playboy have made cameo appearances on the show.

1989 — COPS

When it first aired, COPS showed police officers apprehending criminals from a camcorder.

1992 — 'The Real World'

As the series' first show, "The Real World: New York" brought a new era of reality to the small screen, placing seven unlikely strangers in one house to have their lives taped. The show has continued in its 18th season — the longest-standing show in MTV history.

2001 — Single's paradise

On "Temptation Island," couples are put to the ultimate test as they agree to live with attractive, single people of the opposite sex. Can they beat the temptation? The first season was a success, with the second and third seasons considered as reality TV flops.

2003 — Hoax reality

Bachelor Evan Marriott pretends that he has inherited millions as he is on the search for a potential bride on "Joe Millionaire." Although a mere construction worker, Marriott won the heart of one woman, even after telling her the truth. The two were surprised with a million dollar reward, although the question still stands, "Does money really matter?"

2003 — 'Newlyweds'

Newlywed pop stars Nick Lachey and Jessica Simpson's lives were documented for two years on this hit series. Although the marriage ended this June, who could ever forget Jessica's infamous question about "Chicken of the Sea" — "Is this chicken that I have or is it fish?" Simpson asked.

Those in search of reality should live life, not watch it on TV

I wonder. How many mouth-breathers, people with one eyebrow and Jayhawks with 11 toes does it take to perpetuate our reality television fetish? What keeps this canned lobotomy in production? Help me wonder.

This would be excusable if it contributed something — anything. For this I'll excuse shows like "American Chopper" and home design shows, from which one can learn something, even if it is dramatized.

Escapism is not in itself a bad thing. In eras long forgotten, people conversed, took hobbies or read books — no really, from cover to cover, big words and all. But the endless parade of people in their ugliest and most wretched moments makes me long for something simple — a plague or slaughter by Mongol hordes would be nice.

What have these produced: "Survivor: Herpes Peninsula," "Big Brother: The Toilet Cam Years" and MTV's crown jewel, ostensibly called, "The Real World," which consists of pretty people with gnats' brains, stray dogs' morals and no jobs living in nice places for free. And let us not forget one or two scant offerings of racial diversity; man cannot make a "Real World" on white bread alone.

In 1998, when Irene McGee was slapped on camera by her male roommate, he was ordered to take anger management classes but allowed to stay on the show. How's this for reality TV: slap an MTV executive on a public street. We can make a reality show of the jail cell you share with R. Kelly called "Golden Shower Camera."

But the thickheaded masses are ravenous for the slobbering mistreatment these shows provide. "Survivor" wouldn't have lasted if they tied teams together and told them sink or swim. Fans wait wide-eyed for each episode's end, wherein one unfortunate gets tossed off the island of love and into the glowing seas of venereal disease.

It is not so much the consequence-less life or the total disregard of humanity that would make concentration camp guards cringe. It's the inescapable reality that it is, every last drop, so abysmally stupid and eye-gougingly bad. In less than 24 hours, people arrive by carriage or limousine, confess their darkest secrets and hop into bed together — all in a day's work.

Yes, the options are limitless. "Jackass" — as Maddox once opined, the only show ever named after its target audience; "The Bachelor" — which should be retitled "Who Wants to Marry a Cutthroat Bimbo?"; and, the most precious of all, the dating show. "She's a worn-out stripper; he's 35 and works at a gas station; let's see what happens." Let's feign ignorance that they're either A: going to get into some chimpanzee, turd-slinging fight or B: go home together. Try selling a date where two functional people go get coffee, talk about politics and decide to call each other later. We want the ofal of society, with extra tattoos and a gut ring.

So you say you want reality: go outside, eat a sandwich, call someone, play with a dog, pay your bills, get bitten by a spider. Reality, like food, is best not received through a tube.

Editor of K-Stater magazine wins gold medal for rare stamp collection

For someone who knows nothing about stamps, it might be surprising to learn that a stamp spliced and held together with green masking tape could be part of an award-winning stamp collection.

In fact, this stamp helped Tim Lindemuth, editor of K-Stater magazine for the K-State Alumni Association, win an international gold medal for his stamp collection.

The collection is focused on 20-cent stamps made from 1981 to 1985 called the "Flag over the Supreme Court."

Although he has collected stamps for 50 years, it wasn't until the early 1980s that Lindemuth became involved with competitive exhibiting of his stamps.

"I became bored with collecting and wanted to do something different," he said. "I thought, I think I can do that, but I'm going to do it with a modern stamp because so many of the exhibits are the classics, where many people have paid a lot of money and have been collecting for a very long time. I felt like a pioneer blazing a new trail."

It only took Lindemuth a couple years to win his first national gold medal, but he continued to seek the international gold medal. Lindemuth said it's hard to win an international gold medal because there is specific criteria, including a large emphasis on scarcity and rarity, for a collection.

"There are stamps out there, if you have the money, you can buy them, but something that is truly scarce is unique and one of a kind," he said. "The difficulty of acquisition is so important at the international exhibition level."

Lindemuth had to wait 19 years to find the rarest stamp for his collection: a 17-cent and a 20-cent stamp spliced together by mistake. In 1986, he tried to win the stamp in a phone auction.

"Finally there are only two people left, and I really want this because I know it is the key for my collection," he explained. "Sadly, I had to drop out because the other guy had a bigger checkbook than I did. After the auction, we became friends and started to write each other."

The two stamp collectors kept in touch until three years ago when the winning bidder died. Then, last summer, Lindemuth received a phone call offering him the stamp he once tried to win.

After adding the most scarce stamp he could find to his collection, Lindemuth was ready to win an international gold medal.

In 1996, Lindemuth competed in the international competition and won the Vermil medal, but the judges didn't think his collection had enough scarcity and rarity.

He had to wait 10 years to try again, because the international competition happens only once every 10 years.

Ten years was just enough time for him to perfect his collection to compete in Washington this past summer.

Many companies are investing in the Internet, and Meredith Corporation is no exception, said Stephen Lacy, CEO and president of the company.

"We have invested steadily in the Internet," Lacy said. "We own and operate 30 Web sites. Our first foray into the Internet was with agriculture.com."

Lacy spoke Wednesday morning to a crowded McCain Auditorium as part of the College of Business Administration's Distinguished Lecture Series. He was introduced by the college's dean, Yar M. Ebadi, as a K-State graduate with bachelor's and master's degrees in accounting who has held his current position at Meredith Corporation since July 2006.

"We are privileged to have someone with his wealth of business knowledge," Ebadi said. "He truly is a distinguished Wildcat."

To begin, Lacy gave an overview of the company's operations.

He said Meredith Corporation is responsible for 26 subscription magazines like "Family Circle," "Better Homes and Gardens" and "Ladies' Home Journal." It operates 200 special-interest publications, 400 books and 15 television stations, and generates $1.6 million in revenue.

"We have a long track record of delivering large financial results," Lacy said.

Missouri student dies in fire

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A student at the University of Missouri-St. Louis died early Wednesday in a fire at the university's Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house.

The victim was identified as Brian Schlitter, 25, a senior at the university.

Chad Bowman, president of the K-State chapter of Pike, said the fraternity will solicit donations from its members and from the Manhattan community to help the victim's family and school.

"We are trying to ease the pain, and every little thing helps," he said.

Bowman said he has never dealt with a situation like this at Pike.

Schlitter was one of three students who lived in the small chapter house in St. Louis. When one student arrived home to find a couch on fire, he alerted the other two residents.

Schlitter, whose room was on the second floor, did not follow the other two students out of the house. By the time the two realized this, Schlitter was unable to get downstairs because of the fire. The windows were too small to allow an escape.

The house was quickly engulfed in flames so hot they reportedly melted a small car in the parking lot.

The incident happened less than two weeks after a fire, started by fireworks, killed a student at a fraternity house at Nebraska's Wesleyan University.

Authorities are investigating the cause of the St. Louis fire, but local residents did not report hearing fireworks or partying.

Bowman said Pike has a crisis management plan to deal with any emergency at the K-State chapter. He said this includes an endowment plan to help any victims financially.

As the holiday season continues, K-State will welcome a classic musical with a new twist.

State Street Ballet will perform "The Hollywood Nutcracker" at 7:30 p.m. Friday in McCain Auditorium.

"Most people have never had the opportunity to see this show," said Thomas Jackson, marketing and development officer for McCain Auditorium. "It's a new spin on a timeless classic."

"The Hollywood Nutcracker" is an adaptation of the Tchaikovsky classic set in the 1930s. Although it uses the same score as the classic Nutcracker, the State Street performance will feature different sets, costumes and character development.

"The music will be exactly the same score, but the setting will be different," Jackson said. "People are

c. Nov. 27 to Dec. 1

If you answered 0-2 correctly, you might know the basics of K-State's World AIDS Week. Maybe you should brush up on your knowledge by visiting the display Friday.

If you answered 3-5 correctly, you know some about K-State's events and some about AIDS in general. You should attend the Artists for AIDS Awareness Closing Gala and Silent Donation Art Exhibit 6-9 p.m. in the Main Ballroom in the K-State Student Union.

If you answered 6 or 7 correctly, congratulations. You're either involved with World AIDS Week, or you know your stuff. Celebrate by going on AIDS Walk 2006 at 4:45 p.m. Friday beginning in Bosco Student Plaza.

World simulation mirrors real-world inequality, wars

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mike Wesch, associate professor of anthropology, had his class playing a world simulation Wednesday.

At the beginning of the semester, the class divided into groups, which then created cultures and imported them into the year 1450. The groups then acted out their parts and finished in the year 2100.

"What we're trying to do is trying to simulate world history and the changes cultures undergo in world history," said Kevin Champion, senior in American language and culture.

Champion, a teaching assistant for Wesch's class, said groups were systematically developed based on subsistence patterns. Within these patterns emerged colonizer cultures that displayed aggressive or warlike tendencies.

Additionally, the culture groups created trade networks with surrounding groups to exchange resources.

Wesch introduced the exercise in fall 2004, but Champion said the fall 2006 simulation has been the most successful.

"The way it felt was different, and it felt like it went really smoothly, really well," Champion said.

Wesch created the exercise as part of what he calls an "anti-teaching" philosophy on his weblog.

Sarah Zuiss, junior in elementary education, waits next to the country Fersola so her country Eisenfaust can take it over during the world simulation project Wednesday morning at the Union Ballroom.

"If you line students up in rows and have them face the front of the room ... what they learn is how to listen to the authority and how to repeat what the authority says," he said.

The game contains real-world elements of inequality, power distribution, disease and war.

"We have students researching like crazy - everything about the world. Something comes up in the world simulation, and they want to know how it relates to the real world," Wesch said.

Each group has a power circle, and the power circle makes decisions about government and taxation, with the riches of the land represented by a box of Fruit Loops cereal.

Stronger countries and colonizers gain points by producing Fruit Loop necklaces, a rule that sometimes starts breakfast cereal wars.

Wesch said he hopes to take the exercise a step further during the May intercession by offering a class called World Systems. He said he hopes more students will create larger and more dynamic cultures.

Although the game is Wesch's brainchild, he opens it for improvement by the students who participate.

"The real learning takes place when the students are trying to revise it," he said.

Student's Antarctica trip to complete travels to all 7 continents

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While many students will spend the holiday break at home, one student will celebrate down south - in Antarctica.

Nick Sutcliffe, senior in marketing, will leave Dec. 16 for a trek through South America, eventually arriving in Ushuaia, the southernmost city in the world.

"This is a trip we have been planning for since last year at about this time," Sutcliffe said. "I'm very excited."

The Sutcliffe family, which includes Nick's parents Joe and Rita Sutcliffe, has a passion for traveling. In their travels, the Sutcliffes have been to six continents.

"Ever since I was 18 months old, I have been traveling internationally," Nick said. "I have developed lifelong memories, and the trips have brought my family closer together."

The 21-day trip begins when the Sutcliffes will fly to Buenos Aires, Argentina. From there, they will fly to Ushuaia and board a cruise ship headed for the Drake Passage, where the Atlantic and Pacific oceans meet.

Highlights of the visit will include leaving the cruise boat on small, rubber zodiac rafts to view the continent's vast wildlife and amazing scenery, Nick said.

"Since Antarctica isn't exactly a tourist destination, many of the people on the trip will be researchers or professionals who can give us personal insight," he said.

Although they are traveling to the bottom of the world, the Sutcliffes said they are not worried about the cold.

"December and January are the summer months in Antarctica, so the average high is about 28 degrees," Joe said. "We plan to wear a basic ski outfit with layers underneath."

Antarctica is not a typical tourist destination, but an increasing number of people visit the frozen continent each year.

"It's becoming more popular than in past years," said Paul Christi of Expedition Trips, a travel service that provides cruises to Antarctica. "In total, there are maybe 20 vessels that tour the Arctic, so it's still very secluded."

Because of his opportunity to travel the world at a young age, Nick said he wants a career that includes travel.

"I would like to work for the Department of State, possibly in the field of foreign affairs," he said. "I definitely want to continue to travel."

Nick said his love of travel came from his father, who began his travels while in the Navy.

"When I was in the Navy, I spent some time overseas, and that's where I really caught the bug," said Joe, who is retired.

The Sutcliffes choose not to vacation in the same place twice. Some favorite family vacations have been cruises on the Amazon River in Brazil and on the Rhine in Germany, and a month spent with a rented car in Australia. However, father and son differ on their favorite excursion.

"I think the Greek Islands were amazing," Nick said. "There's just something amazing about the ocean, especially in the Mediterranean."

"My favorite was our two safaris in Africa," Joe said. "The Zimbabwe trip stands out the most. However, we may have to change our minds after this Antarctica trip."

The Sutcliffes do not plan to end their travels any time soon. Although they said they are still looking forward to Antarctica, the family has begun planning multiple future endeavors.

"I would really like to go to India someday, but our next trip will be to the Galapagos Islands," Joe said.

"Once my wife and I are both ready, we plan to spend two months driving through Europe, giving time to really experience the locals. That's one of the things that we like best, getting to know the locals. We love being with people."

Cold front continues

Allies betray more quickly than enemies; U.S. must beware of Russia's shady intentions

Contrary to popular opinion, the Cold War did not end with the fall of the Berlin Wall.

BRETT KING

The struggle between the United States and the former Soviet Union is only on hold, emerging once again when the United States displays weakness in the world community.

Russia is attempting, with what little power it has left, to undermine the United States at every turn.

History is our best judge of Russian military tactics. According to Adam Zamoyski in his book "1812: Napoleon's Fatal March on Moscow" and Dunkan Anderson's "The Eastern Front: From Barbarossa to Berlin, the Campaigns of World War II," Russia used many similar tactics to defeat its enemies in two different conflicts.

In both wars, the Russians retreated with the appearance of weakness caused by opposing forces.

Once winter arrived, the Russians quickly mobilized to cut off supply routes, leaving enemy troops cold and starving. Russian troops would slowly pick at an enemy from behind until the opposition retreated.

The Russian defeat of French forces in 1812 reveals the lengths to which the Russians were willing to go to defeat an enemy. As Napoleon approached Moscow, Russian forces began to burn the city to the ground. When Napoleon reached Moscow, a majority of the city was reduced to rubble, leaving his troops with little to no shelter or other resources to survive the winter months.

History is our greatest tool in providing insight as to how a country will act in the future. After the collapse of the Soviet Union, Russia's foreign policy and economic activities follow many of the same military tactics used in the War of 1812.

After the fall of the Soviet Union, Russia retreated to its natural borders, thus releasing its hold on the satellite communist countries. This mirrors the 1812 retreat from Moscow.

Quick to extend its influence into newly formed democracies, the United States has worked with emerging governments in the Eastern Bloc region.

During times of conflict, the United States military was called in to keep the peace in countries like Bosnia, Serbia and other territories of the former Yugoslavian region.

The United States' increasing influence in the Eastern Bloc and the Middle East can be seen as an encroachment on territory once under Russia's sphere of influence.

Recently, Russia has started fires itself in any entity that has increased tensions with the United States.

These scorching fires have been set in the U.N. Security Council, North Korea, Iran and many other Middle Eastern countries. The Jerusalem Post reported last week that Russia is providing Iranians with the sophisticated Tor-M1 air defense system, which can target up to 48 air targets (airplanes and helicopters) at one time.

Infernos set across the globe by the Russians are designed to keep the United States in quicksand, sinking from superpower status with increasing speed as we fight the trap.

Robert Greene's "48 Laws of Power" states, "Be wary of friends – they will betray you more quickly, for they are easily aroused to envy ... you have more to fear from friends than from enemies."

Wake up, America, our so-called allies are plotting our demise. The Cold War is not over; winter has just begun.

Discussing possibility of reinstating draft wastes Congress' time

Have you ever heard the story of how a father punishes his son after the son is caught smoking a cigarette?

In order for the son to truly realize how disgusting smoking is, the father feels it is necessary to force his son to smoke an entire pack of cigarettes in one sitting. This of course will turn the boy off from smoking forever.

This logic is insane, right?

Well, ladies and gentlemen, say hello to your newly elected Democratic Congress. Insane is just what these Democrats are.

Take Charles Rangel, a Congressman from New York, for example. He is trying to punish Republicans the same way the dad in our story tries to punish his disobedient son. Rangel recently announced that when the Democrats officially take control, he will propose legislation that will ultimately reinstate a military draft. He feels this proposal will generate discussion about the current war in Iraq, and hopefully cause Republicans to see the error of their ways.

In fact, Democrats have said there is no real intent to try to pass this proposal. Nancy Pelosi, the House minority leader and soon-to-be speaker of the House, admitted this.

"Don't worry," Pelosi said. "The bill has no chance of passing."

Then why, Nancy, in the wide, wide world, would you want to waste valuable time on this discussion?

Both Pelosi and Rangel feel Republicans have no idea of the sacrifices made by soldiers and their families. The draft, in these politicians' opinions, would open the eyes of conservatives and make them realize how unjust the war in Iraq actually is. If the children of members of Congress were subject to a draft, perhaps the members would decide the war isn't such a good idea, according to the reasoning of Rangel and his fellow Democrats.

"It's not about a draft. It's about shared sacrifice for our country," Pelosi said.

What seems so insane about this whole thing is that those now making sacrifices for our country overseas enlisted by their own free will. They were not forced to join the armed forces. You know what you are getting into when you enlist with the Army or any other military force. You can blame President Bush for the war all you want, but you cannot blame Bush for men and women enlisting in the military. Congress does not need an eye-opener about the horrors of war, and it does not need to be scolded for something it cannot control – the people who enlist in the armed forces. Besides, the only reason we would need a draft would be if our armed forces are lacking in numbers, and that is not the case.

Even to bring up this idea of a draft in Congress is a waste of time and money.

According to www.usgovinfo.about.com, the current salary for members of the House and Senate is $165,200 per year (Ol' Pelosi gets about 20 grand extra). Is this a wise use of taxpayers' money? Is this what Congress should spend valuable time discussing? Perhaps instead of bringing up a bill that even its supporters know will fail, our Congress could use that time to propose something to better our country.

Oh, Democrats, always on the defensive and trying to accuse Republicans of silly things. Let's not waste our time discussing something we don't want to pass. There's plenty of other, somewhat beneficial ways we can waste our time for the next two years.

TO THE POINT

An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Editors share favorite winter activities

As the temperature dips down to glove and scarf weather for more than 24 hours, we share our favorite cold weather activities.

Leann Sulzen – I really hate winter weather, so I prefer to stay inside and bake for the holidays.

Annette Lawless – Snuggling up to someone warm, preferably a tall, dark, handsome gentleman.

Zachary T. Eckels – Starting fires – the legal kind.

Kristen Roderick – My favorite winter activities happened when my family and I would visit Colorado. We would either go skiing, ice skating or just sit by a warm fire. It's cold, but spending time with my family is worth it.

Kerry Fischer – I love to curl up with a blanket, a cup of tea and a great book. What better way to escape the cold than by immersing yourself in a great story?

Anthony Mendoza – Braving the 70-degree weather by wearing a pair of shorts and a sweatshirt while playing a round of golf on the Southern California golf courses.

Emily Lawrence – Going to the tree lot to buy a real Christmas tree.

Abby Brownback – Think good movie, fire in the fireplace, popcorn, steamed milk and friends: a perfect recipe for making the most of bitterly cold winter evenings.

Megan Moser – I'm a big fan of decorating for Christmas, indoors and out. I also like baking cookies when it's snowing.

Steven Doll – There is nothing like starting a good ol' snowball fight with friends and then coming inside to relax with some hot chocolate.

Owen Kennedy – Writing my name in the snow.

Ice rink in City Park provides after-school activity

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On Nov. 15 of every year, an ice rink opens in City Park.

Next to the band shell, there is a 50- by 80-foot rink where people of all ages can go to enjoy themselves.

Admission and skate rental are $1.50 each.

Adam Dolezal, director and supervisor of the ice rink, said the number of people at the rink depends on the day.

"We open during the weekdays at 3:30 p.m., and we usually have a pretty strong after-school crowd," he said. "On the weekends, though, we average about 50 to 100 people."

"On Wednesday nights, we have three-on-three hockey games as well, but the people who play have to bring all their own equipment."

The rink is open 3:30-8 p.m. weekdays.

On weekends, the rink opens at 1 p.m. both days and closes at 7 p.m. Saturdays and 8 p.m. Sundays.

The after-school crowd can provide anywhere from three to 20 skaters.

Josh Kindis, a middle-school student in Manhattan, said he comes to the rink fairly often.

"I really like to skate," Kindis said as he laced up his skates.

His friend, Deron Ryan, an eighth grader, was skating for the first time.

"I am a little scared to do this because I have never done it before," he said.

But Ryan said he has enjoyed the skating he has done so far.

The rink, which opened in 1982, has operated annually ever since.

The rink opens every year on Nov. 15 and closes March 4.

The rink is open every day and is a favorite spot for many students and families.

The rink can be reserved for special events for $25 per hour for any number of people.

However, each person still pays the cost of the skate rental.

"We had a couple of fraternity guys come in here the other day to rent our rink out. They were organizing some sort of date party," Dolezal said.

Those who are interested in renting the rink should call the city office to make arrangements.

Lessons are available to those who need them. Adult lessons are $25 for six one-hour sessions, and children's lessons are $20. Information for both can be obtained by calling the city office at (785) 587-2757.

In addition to the fun, injuries sometimes occur at the rink.

"The most serious injury we have had was a grandfather came in, tried to do some tricks, and fell and broke his hip," Dolezal said.

"But most of the injuries can be fixed with a Band-Aid."

error stamp that helped me win the gold," he said.

There are more than 800 members in the American Association of Philatelic Exhibitors, which is a national organization for people who compete. Lindemuth has been part of the group for 30 years and is a National Organization Charter member. He also has been a part of the American Philatelic Society, which he said is the biggest stamp collector organization in the United States, for the past 50 years.

Lindemuth has befriended many people through this hobby, including Manhattan resident Lejuan Shrimplin.

The two were in the same local philatelic society and traveled to Chicago in the 1980s for an international show.

"He was one of the very knowledgeable people in the stamp group that we had here," Shrimplin said.

She said she collects stamps because of their history.

"Why did they issue this stamp and how was it printed?" she said.

People who want to start a collection should find a source, Lindemuth said. When he was beginning his collection, his source was the controller's office. Office staff gave him the envelopes they received so he could go through the stamps. In this mail he found a 20-cent stamp provided a key addition to his competition collection.

Lindemuth said collecting reminds him of his work.

"One of the things as an adult that I like about collecting is that there is a lot of printing," he said. "It is similar to my work, and I like to do the research."

"Because the collection I have is from the '80s, there isn't a lot of literature on it ... so I'm helping to write the literature that will be read 100 years from now."

Lindemuth will now compete for the Reserve Grand or Grand National award. He said he hopes to compete in the Champion of Champions.

"I think that for anybody who collects something, it's the thrill of the hunt," he said, "learning about your hobby and meeting other people who share the same interests and stories."

used to seeing an older, Victorian setting in 'The Nutcracker,' but this performance will bring alive the Art Deco dreamscapes of the '30s."

In this performance, Artistic Director Rodney Gustafson tries to infuse new wit and style into "The Nutcracker."

"This show will be very glamorous and glitzy," Jackson said. "For example, instead of a rat king, this show has rat king gangsters."

State Street Ballet, based out of Santa Barbara, Calif., is a traveling company dedicated to bringing new work in dance while preserving the classics.

The company, which began in 1994, consists of 16 professional, international dancers from such places as Russia and Germany. Regarded highly by the Los Angeles Times for its high energy and exceptional choreography, the company's Midwestern tour of "The Hollywood Nutcracker" will continue until Dec. 5.

Although he is looking forward to the performance, one K-State student remains skeptical about the modern interpretation.

"It's a good holiday play, and it encompasses a lot of audiences," Andy LeValley, junior in English, said. "I'm looking at it with an open mind. It could be cool if it turns out, but I can see a rendition going downhill."

However, other students said the true nature of "The Nutcracker" will be shown, regardless of the changes.

"Every 'Nutcracker' has unique and different portrayals of the music through the choreography," Anna Quisenberry, junior in mass communications, said. "I was in 'The Nutcracker' for 16 years, so I love how I can relate to the dancers and the story that is being told."

Tickets for Friday's performance can be purchased by visiting the McCain Box Office 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. or by calling the office at (785) 532-6428.

in strategic planning for its readership.

"We're beginning to focus on the growing Hispanic marketplace and the next generation of readers, which are sons and daughters," he said. "We focus primarily on women whose main focus is caring for their families and developing themselves."

Lacy said the corporation's strong presence on the Internet generates advertising revenues.

However, despite its success, Meredith Corporation has seen its difficulties.

"A large challenge for us has been slower magazine advertising growth," Lacy said. "There has been an industry-wide circulation weakness. Twenty years ago, the average woman made three trips to the grocery store every week. Now she makes about .8. This affects us at the newsstands."

He said the corporation also faces pressures from paper, posting and printing expenses.

"Dealing with the Post Office in a monopoly," Lacy said. "We're expecting that it will cost $1 million more in postal costs in 2007 due to postage cost increases."

Lacy said TiVo presents another challenge for the corporation, because it allows people to skip commercials.

"Many people don't even bother to watch the commercials we produce anymore," he said.

Lacy ended his lecture with lessons learned in his career.

"I always tell students to just relax, take a step back, and get an entry-level position," he said. "Get a position with health insurance, because you'll be kicked off your parents'."

"Who would have thought after graduation from K-State, I would end up here, running a media company? A degree at K-State will make you successful."

Lacy said most K-State students come from families with high ethical values.

"Never compromise your values," he said. "You always hear about tragedies where people gave up on their values, which has hurt innocent people. No matter where you are, you can never earn enough money for it to be worth sharing a jail cell with your boss or co-workers."

Many students found the lecture worthwhile.

"I came for extra credit for a class, but I actually found it to be really interesting," Chelsea Stroh, senior in business management, said. "I enjoyed hearing about the problems with TiVo and how it will take over advertising."

Teams must earn berth in playoffs

The Bowl Championship Series is flawed.

The end of the college football season is approaching quickly, as are debates on the perfect playoff system to replace the BCS. Every season, a computer ranks the top two teams in the country based on strategic formulas, and this is how the national title game is decided.

I have wondered for years why a playoff system has not been established. It would be much more fun to watch than waiting every Sunday to see who is ranked where when the BCS rankings are released.

Fans would relish in the fact that the best teams in the country would have to prove why they are the best by beating the other dominant teams in the country. Plus, a playoff system would provide a lot of excitement for all die-hard college fans.

If I could create a playoff system, it would include eight teams — the six BCS conference champions and two at-large bids. It won't happen this year, but my playoff bracket would look like this if it were to happen.

The rankings are based on the 1-8 seeds, not on the teams' current BCS rankings, and their records are current as of Thursday. Not all of the conference champions have been decided yet, and I have predicted which teams will win their respective conferences.

FIRST ROUND

■ No. 1 Ohio State (12-0, Big 10 Conference champions) vs. No. 8 Boise State (12-0, at-large)

Boise State receives one of the at-large bids because it has an undefeated record and deserves a shot at the No. 1 team in the country. The Broncos can't hang with Troy Smith and Company, and the Buckeyes roll 38-21.

■ No. 4 Florida (11-1, Southeastern Conference champions) vs. No. 5 Oklahoma (10-2, Big 12 Conference champions)

Oklahoma pulls the upset against a quality Florida team. A healthy Adrian Peterson leads the Sooners to a close 24-21 victory over the Gators.

■ No. 3 Michigan (11-1, at-large) vs. No. 6 Louisville (10-1, Big East Conference champions)

Louisville would take down a Michigan team coming in with a letdown after the 41-38 loss to Ohio State that cost the Wolverines a shot at the national title.

■ No. 2 Southern California (10-1, Pacific 10 Conference champions) vs. No. 7 Wake Forest (10-2, Atlantic Coastal Conference champions)

Wake Forest gets in due to a win in the ACC Championship game against Georgia Tech, but the Demon Deacons don't have enough offense to hang with USC. Trojans win 35-17.

SEMI-FINALS

■ No. 1 Ohio State vs. No. 5 Oklahoma

Against just another overmatched opponent, Ohio State rolls 28-7.

■ No. 2 Southern California vs. No. 6 Louisville

Big surprise upset here, as Louisville wins in a 45-42 thriller.

NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP

■ No. 1 Ohio State vs. No. 6 Louisville

Crown Ohio State the national champs, because the Buckeyes will beat any opponent standing in between them and the title.

College football fans would enjoy the season's close much more if it were to end like this.

The two teams playing for the national title would earn a berth in the title game because they proved they were the best on the field and not because of some computer ranking.

Blog petitions to establish men's soccer as varsity sport

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A push is being made to bring men's soccer to the Big 12 Conference.

The push is spearheaded by a blog created to spread the word about men's soccer and to give people a chance to sign a petition asking the athletic directors of the Big 12 to sponsor varsity programs.

According to the blog, which can be found at big12menssoccer.blogspot.com, the Big 12 is doing a disservice to potential student athletes who want to play soccer close to home.

The Web site lists more than 60 players from states within the Big 12 who have been forced to play at other schools.

Many players on the K-State Men's Club Soccer team have given up their dreams of playing college soccer to attend school closer to home, said Matt Campbell, senior in mechanical engineering and club president.

So why isn't men's soccer a varsity sport in the Big 12?

"One reason may be Title IX,"

Campbell said.

Title IX mandates that schools must provide opportunities for athletic participation for both men and women proportional to the undergraduate population, said Laura Tietjen, associate director of athletics for K-State.

While it would be possible for a school to comply with the legislation without adding a new women's sport, it is difficult for most universities, Tietjen said.

"Most institutions would feel they have to add a women's sport with a men's sport," Tietjen said.

The blog suggests K-State could comply with the legislation by adding women's soccer, too.

However, many other schools already struggle to comply with Title IX and would find adding another men's sport a daunting task, Tietjen said.

K-State has not added a men's sport since the 1970s.

"We want to make certain we provide the best opportunities for the student athletes we currently have," Tietjen said.

Soccer's relative unfamiliarity might be another reason for not bringing it to the conference.

"Soccer's still a new phenomenon in our country," Campbell said. "There's not as much support (for soccer) as other sports, but if we had a sanctioned NCAA program, we would see more."

The decision, however, is not up to the NCAA or even the Big 12.

"The Big 12 Conference does not determine what sports are brought in," said Dru Hancock, associate commissioner of championships for the Big 12.

Rather, the universities decide individually what sports to offer. The Big 12 only gets involved once at least six teams participate in a sport, which then makes the sport eligible for the awarding of a Big 12 championship, Hancock said.

Whatever the reason, men's soccer faces an uphill battle toward becoming a varsity sport in the Big 12. But if it is introduced at some point, Campbell said he is confident it will be a hit.

"If one school gets it," Campbell said, "all would catch on."

Tim Weiser, K-State's director of athletics, was unavailable for comment.

Wildcats de-clawed by Bears

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State coach Bob Huggins sat with his head in his hands and seemingly didn't want to look up as his team approached the bench for a timeout.

This probably wasn't what he had hoped for when he agreed to come to K-State.

At the time, the Wildcats were trailing California 48-32 with 11:53 remaining in the game. Eventually Huggins looked up and went to talk with his Wildcats, but judging by the result of the contest, his words didn't help.

K-State (4-2) was dominated 78-48 by the Golden Bears (6-1) Wednesday in Haas Pavilion in Berkeley, Calif.

Freshman center Jason Bennett used his 7-foot-3 frame to tie a K-State record with six blocks, and Cartier Martin scored 16 points, but it wasn't nearly enough for the Wildcats.

California used a balanced offensive attack to shoot 27-of-60 from the field.

Three players scored in double figures, led by forward Ryan Anderson with 15 points on 6-of-10 shooting.

The competition was close for the first part of the game, but the Bears used a 15-2 run over the final 7 1/2 minutes in the first half to go into the break with a 37-23 lead. California's fast-paced offense created a lot of easy inside shots.

Anderson was a perfect 4-of-4 from the field in the first period to lead all scorers with nine points.

K-State opened the second half with a brief run in an attempt to make things interesting. After Bennett tied the record with a block on the Bears' DeVon Hardin, senior guard Lance Harris raced down the court to score and was fouled.

Harris' free throw made it 37-28, but that was as close as the Wildcats would get. The Bears responded with an 11-2 run to break the game wide open.

Harris and Martin were the only players to score more than four points for the Wildcats, with 16 and 14, respectively. Junior forward David Hoskins was held scoreless.

Freshman Luis Colon was ejected with 6:32 remaining in the game after he punched California's Taylor Harrison in the back of the head.

K-State moved to 2-14 in non-conference road games dating back to the 2000-01 season. The Wildcats dropped their first game ever to California and now hold a 5-1 series advantage since the first meeting in 1951.

After going 2-8 on the road last season, K-State is now 1-2 away from Manhattan in its first season under Huggins.

The current road trip continues Saturday when the team travels to Fort Collins, Colo., to face Colorado State.

VOL | Spiegelberg named CVU National Player of the Week

K-State setter Stacey Spiegelberg was named the Collegiate Volleyball Update National Player of the Week in an announcement on Tuesday afternoon. It is the first national weekly honor for a Wildcat since Sept. 27, 1999, when Dawn Cady earned the AVCA National Player of the Week.

For the week, Spiegelberg tallied 95 assists (13.57 apg), 18 digs (2.57 dpg), 10 kills (1.43 kpg), nine service aces (1.29 sapg) and seven blocks (1.00 bpg). K-State hit .309 for the week with 113 kills, registered 27 total team blocks and tallied 24 service aces.

In Wednesday's 3-1 win in Lubbock, Spiegelberg dished out a match-high 58 assists, tallied 10 digs, recorded a match- and career-high five service aces, tallied five kills on a .556 hitting percentage with zero attack errors and added in four blocks. It was the 11th double-double of the season for the junior from Overland Park, Kan., and the 20th of her career.

In Saturday's 3-0 win over Kansas in Ahearn Field House, Spiegelberg dished out 37 assists, registered eight digs, jumped into the attack herself with five kills on a .500 hitting percentage, dropped in four service aces and aided the defense with three blocks.

During the week, she became just the third player in the 32-year history of K-State volleyball to record a quadruple-triple for a season, surpassing triple digits in assists (1,415), digs (249), blocks (107) and kills (107).

TRK | Wildcats sign 5 athletes to National Letters of Intent

K-State track and field has signed five athletes, three female and two male, to National Letters of Intent in the early signing period. The new additions are Aiga Grabuste, Michael Healey, Boaz Lalang, Lauren Lucas and Sydney Messick.

Grabuste is a combined events athlete with international experience, finishing ninth in the heptathlon at the 2006 World Junior Championships in Beijing. The product of Rezekne, Latvia, has personal bests of 5,443 points in the heptathlon, 3,935 points in the pentathlon, a distance of 19-09.50 in the long jump, and a time of 14:06 in the 100-meter hurdles.

Healey joins the Wildcats from Katy, Texas, and Cinco Ranch High School. He is the third Cougar to sign with K-State in the last three years, joining Scott Sellers and Denise Baker. Healey has a personal-best clearance in the high jump of 7-00.00.

Lalang is an accomplished distance runner from Timbora, Kenya, who finished third at the 2006 Kenyan Junior Championships in the 1,500-meter run with a clocking of 3:42.20. He also is ranked 18th on the World Junior rankings in the event.

Lucas is a native of Round Rock, Texas, who competes in the pole vault. She has registered a personal-best clearance of 12-01.00.

Messick, a product of Topeka's Seaman High School, was the 2006 Kansas SA State Cross Country champion. She notched a time of 14:59 on the 4K track at Rim Rock Farm.

K-State will open the 2007 indoor track and field season Dec. 8-9 with the Carol Robinson Winter Pentathlon and KSU All-Corners meet in Ahearn Field House.

BBM | Lachey introduced as part-owner of Tacoma Rainiers

TACOMA, Wash. — Former "Newlywed" Nick Lachey announced a new union Wednesday — and no, it has nothing to do with Jessica Simpson.

Lachey was introduced as a part-owner of the Tacoma Rainiers, the Triple-A affiliate of the Seattle Mariners. Before Wednesday, Lachey had no connection with the waterfront city 30 miles south of Seattle, other than occasional performances at the nearby Tacoma Dome.

Now, he's part of the Schlegel Sports Group based out of Dallas, and a one-third owner of the Rainiers.

Lachey's involvement in the ownership group wasn't originally announced when word leaked of the Rainiers sale in July. That was by design, says Kirby Schlegel, hoping the public relations pop of announcing Lachey's involvement on Wednesday would boost interest in the Rainiers.

Health insurance plans offer students options in paying medical bills

Illustration by Donnie Lee [COLLEGIAN]

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 17 percent of college students were uninsured in 2004, and these students account for about 10 percent of the country's uninsured population, according to a December 2004 article in University Business, a monthly magazine for college and university administrators.

Many students are insured, covered by their parents' policies that automatically drop them after graduation or upon their 23rd birthday.

Kedric Elmore, senior in geology, said he was covered by his mother's insurance until he turned 24. He was covered last year when he worked as a school bus driver for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383. However, Elmore no longer is a bus driver and is uninsured because he can't afford it.

Sometimes he does think about not being insured, especially when he's sick, Elmore said.

"There have been times when my mother says, 'Maybe you should go to a doctor,' but I say, 'I can't,' because I'm not insured," he said.

Although many students might be offered jobs with health benefits upon graduation, it would be wise to look into the options now.

Listed below are three insurance plans, so you can find the plan that is right for you.

STUDENT INJURY AND SICKNESS INSURANCE PLAN

This plan, which is underwritten by The MEGA Life and Health Insurance Company, is offered specifically to students enrolled in any of the Kansas Board of Regents' universities, including K-State.

Classified as a preferred provider organization plan (PPO), this student plan allows those covered to see any doctor without a referral. However, it might call for a lower rate of reimbursement if the doctor is outside the preferred network.

This plan costs $876 per year and offers a deductible of $500. With this deductible, a person must pay $500 in medical bills before the insurance company will begin to help with payment.

This plan has almost no co-payment requirements, although there is a $5 co-payment on lab work.

Although there are not many procedures that require co-payments, the co-insurance for this plan can be as much as 25 percent for doctors who are considered part of this insurance provider's network of health care providers. Policyholders will pay co-insurance unless they have reached their out-of-pocket maximum. For this plan, the co-insurance begins

See INSURANCE Page 8

Health insurance terminology defined

■ Co-insurance: money an individual is required to pay for services after a deductible has been paid. It's often specified as a percentage (for example, employee pays 20 percent, and insurance pays 80 percent).

■ Co-payment: predetermined flat rate individual pays for health care services, like doctor's visits, in addition to what insurance covers.

■ Deductible: the amount an individual must pay for health care expenses before insurance covers the cost.

■ Lifetime maximum: maximum amount a health plan will pay in benefits to an insured individual during the individual's lifetime.

■ Out-of-pocket maximum: predetermined limited amount of money that individual must pay out of his or her own savings before an insurance company will pay 100 percent of health care expenses.

■ Preferred Provider Organization: doctors from a pre-selected group determined by the insurance company. Generally, insured members receive discounted rates by using selected doctors.

■ Underwriter: the company that assumes responsibility for the risk, issues insurance policies and receives premiums.

Car crash kills student

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A 20-year-old female K-State student died Thursday morning in a car accident when she lost control of her vehicle south of Westmoreland, Kan., according to a report by WIBW, Topeka's CBS affiliate.

Thomsen

The student, Mary Thomsen, was driving on Kansas Highway 99 when she lost control of her Ford Contour and smashed into a tree.

Thomsen's parents, Chris and Diane Thomsen of Hartford, Kan., were unavailable for comment. The Kansas Highway Patrol also could not be reached for comment as of press time.

According to an e-mail from Heather Reed, assistant dean of student life, a funeral for Thomsen, who was a junior in education and history, will be at 1:30 p.m. Monday at the United Methodist Church in Burlington, Kan. The Jones Funeral Home is in charge of the service.

RCPD opens assessment to community

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A team of assessors from the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies, Inc. will examine all aspects of the Riley County Police Department's services, procedures and overall operations this weekend.

Community members and RCPD employees are invited to offer comments at an on-site assessment at 7 p.m. Monday in Room 161 of the Manhattan Headquarters Fire Station, 2000 Denison Ave.

Suelyn Hooper, RCPD planning and accreditation manager, said the assessment is a standard procedure but one that indicates the importance of providing the community an opportunity to comment.

"We get some people who want to air a grievance, maybe if they've had a speeding ticket, and we do get people who come out from the community," Hooper said.

Hooper said every comment is taken seriously.

"It's good for the assessors to see both sides," she said.

Assessors will include Robert Johnson, team leader and retired from the Illinois Police Department; Elaine Snow, Rome City Police Department; and Michael West, Gwinnett County Police Department.

Last year, 12 speakers came before the committee. Hooper said the average is between eight and 15 people.

Once assessors complete a review of the agency, they will report to the full commission. The commission decides if the agency will be granted accredited status, which lasts three years.

Pageant marks fraternity's centennial

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men of the Kappa Tau chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity will have their eighth-annual Miss Black and Gold pageant at 7 p.m. Saturday in Forum Hall.

This year's pageant theme, "Centennial Woman," marks the 100-year anniversary of the national, historically black fraternity.

"This year is a very special year for us, it will be a huge celebration," said Brandon Clark, Alpha adviser of the Kappa Tau chapter. "We want everyone, no matter what race or gender to come out of their comfort zone and join in this occasion with us."

Miss Black and Gold is an event that offers diversity programming for the campus and for the 12 women vying to win the title of Miss Black and Gold 2006, Clark said.

The pageant began in 1976 at the fraternity's national convention in New York to honor and showcase the accomplishments, beauty and talent of African-American women.

The pageant came to K-State in 1999. This was something the fraternity always wanted to do, but wasn't certain would receive a positive response from the university, since K-State had not had pageants before, Clark said.

Clark said the fraternity wanted the event to define black beauty.

"Black women do not always fit into the Western standards of beauty," Clark said. "We wanted to shed light (on African-American women), showing they are beautiful."

The first pageant filled Forum Hall with more than 500 students, faculty, community, friends and family members of contestants.

Paris Rossiter, member of Alpha Phi Alpha and co-coordinator of the first Miss Black and Gold pageant at K-State, said the group received a lot of support from faculty and students.

Rossiter said when the fraternity announced 15 men planned to organize a beauty pageant for women, word quickly spread throughout campus.

"People were in anticipation to see how the pageant would turn out," Rossiter said.

The K-State community was skeptical at first, but after seeing the finished product, students and faculty recognized the time and effort put into the pageant, Rossiter said.

Careem Gladney, co-coordinator of this year's pageant, said the criteria on which contestants are judged are advertisement sales, ticket sales, grade point average, business wear, talent, swimwear, formal wear, question-and-answer and attendance throughout the pageant.

The judges of the pageant are members of each of the fraternity's Kansas chapters and Kimetris Baltrip, assistant professor of journalism.

The pageant winner receives a

Senators grant 3 groups funds for trip to conference

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student senators approved 10 allocations to student groups during their last meeting of the semester Thursday.

Four of the allocations went to campus Christian groups. Three of these groups, InterVarsity Christian Fellowship, Ichthus Christian Fellowship and Workers of Wisdom requested funding to go to the same conference, Urbana Student Missions Convention, Dec. 27-31 in St. Louis.

There, 25,000 people are expected to "gather to worship God and hear how he is using people to accomplish his purposes throughout the world," according to the conference Web site, urbana.org.

InterVarsity, which plans to send 22 delegates, received $1,000; Ichthus, which plans to send 34 delegates, received $1,000; and Workers of Wisdom, which plans to send 12 delegates, received $550.

The discrepancy exists because some organizations already hit funding limits for travel, according to the committee's rules, allocations committee member Matt Coleman said.

Senators also allocated $2,649.35 to Campus Crusade for Christ to bring recovering sex addict Michael Leahy to K-State to speak and show the film "Porn Nation" to "show the effect of pornography on our culture," according to the bill.

Senators also approved funding to ACTION for the Campaign for Non-violence and Sigma Alpha Iota. Student Governing Association pushed other allocations on the agenda to finalize them before winter break, including those to the Alliance for Peace and Justice, Theta Alpha Pi and Up 'Til Dawn.

For more information on allocations, go to www.k-state.edu/osas/sga.

CAMPUS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Director to retire

Cold weather will stay; students find ways to keep warm

By Katelynn Hasler
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a wind chill steady at about 8 degrees, a warm bed or a break for something hot to drink is on the minds of many.

"It's really hard to get out of bed in the morning when it's like this," Kyla Pratt, freshman in biology, said. "It's like, warm bed or freezing outside and class, hrm."

The winter storm passing through several Midwestern states originated in the Pacific Northwest and will continue to move east over the weekend, climatologist Mary Knapp said.

While cities from Wichita to Kansas City, Kan., saw snowfall at up to 2 inches an hour, Manhattan avoided the brunt of the storm, because very dry air over the area causes condensation to melt long before it reaches the ground, Knapp said.

While Manhattan did not receive snow or winter storm advisories, the temperature is expected to remain in the 20s for the rest of the weekend.

"We could have stood another weekend of mild weather, but it's just not in the cards for us," Knapp said. "We'll be lucky if we make it above freezing (today). We should see some sunshine, but it won't do much to provide any warmth."

The good news, Knapp said, is that the wind should die down some in the next few days, raising the wind chill. Knapp said she expected the storm to have passed over Kansas by early this morning but warned travelers to check reports often.

"This is the time of year where these storms can develop and change in nature very quickly," she said. "Travelers should realize that conditions can change even while you're driving. In this kind of weather, even an hour is a long time."

Some students were caught off guard by the sudden drop in temperature.

"I thought I had a good week before I needed to go buy gloves and things," Lleran Johnson, freshman in accounting, said. "But I needed them ASAP. I had to run to Wal-Mart last night and buy gloves."

Belinda Post, freshman in dance, said she didn't have any long-sleeved shirts in Manhattan when the cold weather started. She had to make a trip home to bring some back.

Moore Hall residents would have been thankful for the warm clothes. A fire alarm forced residents to stand outside for about 20 minutes Thursday morning when the temperature was in the teens.

"It was very, very windy," Johnson said. "A lot of people just had to grab something to wear. One guy didn't even have a shirt on, just a towel wrapped around his chest."

Many people turned to coffee shops for respite from the cold. Kevin Porter, the front-of-house manager for Bluestem Bistro said the shop had about 20 percent more visitors Thursday than on a normal day.

"It's been really, really busy," he said. "So many people are coming in and getting something warm to drink and just taking a minute to relax out of the cold."

Mallory Ayers, sophomore in business administration and Union Station employee, said Thursday's sales were about double those of a normal day.

"We had lines backed out the door for about an hour when it was really crazy," she said. "It's been steady all day, really."

TO THE POINT Health care must provide for uninsured

On "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart," former Vermont Gov. Howard Dean said one of the hopes of the new Democratic majorities in the House and Senate is to provide health insurance to everyone under age 25.

But insuring millions of uninsured Americans is easier said than done. Today's Collegian cites a report stating 17 percent of college students are uninsured.

It is no question U.S. health care needs reform, and students are some of the people most affected by this need. But what can be done? Look to Massachusetts and Canada.

This year, Massachusetts passed a plan that is one of the closest to universal health care in the country. The law combined subsidies for those who weren't properly insured with a requirement that all citizens have insurance, according to a U.S. News-wire article on Yahoo.com.

Canada offers complete universal health care, which allows all eligible individuals to receive treatment for almost any medical problem. However, taxpayers foot the bill.

The United States needs to reform health care immediately. Write your Congressional representatives about your concerns and the urgency of this dilemma.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

So we're reaching that time of year again. What time, you say? The time of the year when we remember how certain organizations in this country seem to hate Christians. No, not al-Qaeda, not even the Democratic Party. The group of which I speak has far more power than these. I speak of the American Civil Liberties Union. You haven't heard of it?

Let me introduce it to you. The Baptist Press News in December 2002 reported on a New Jersey third-grade teacher who, under pressure from the ACLU, cancelled a class trip to see "A Christmas Carol" on Broadway. It's unfortunate these children missed out on a wonderful opportunity. The Washington Times also ran a story in December 2002 about a lawsuit filed by the ACLU against a Georgia Public School district that designated Dec. 25 as Christmas. However, the ACLU had no problem with the designations of Kwanzaa or Hanukkah, and overlooked the fact that Christmas is a federal holiday.

RYAN SPENCER

In December 2003, the Times ran a story about the ACLU filing action against a Pittsburgh, Penn., parking lot for setting aside parking stalls for visitors to a Roman Catholic nativity scene.

I could go on and on. It's a given part of the calendar year that right around Nov. 30, the stories around the water cooler, or whatever you kids gather around these days, start to circulate about people are anti-Christmas and why they do what they do.

If you're saying to yourself, "I've never heard about these stories or untold facts of the secularist crowd," that means you're one of those people, so congratulations.

Now that you know what the ACLU is in regard to Christmas, it's important to remember the ACLU can be fun during the Christmas season. Try sending Christmas cards. Yes, Christmas cards! Wanna have some fun this Christmas? Send some Christmas cheer to the ACLU! Since it is working so diligently to eliminate the Christmas part of the holiday season, we all should send the ACLU a nice, Christian card to brighten up its dark, sad, little world.

Make sure it says "Merry Christmas" on it! Here's the address:

ACLU
125 Broad Street, 18th Floor
New York, NY 10004

If you're going to send one, don't be rude — that's not the reason for the season. We really want to communicate with the ACLU. It deserves us. I think everyone who cares about the holiday should send a card to wish the ACLU a Merry Christmas and spread the cheer. This is just the thing to bring some Christmas joy to those who might not have the chance to experience it. So spend $0.39 and tell the ACLU to leave Christmas alone. Also tell it there is no such thing as a "holiday tree." It's a Christmas tree.

Oh, and Merry Christmas.

Self-discovery, growth needed before marriage

As a fifth-year student, I've learned quite a bit and seen a lot happen here in Manhattan. For example, I remember when the old Wal-Mart was where Hobby Lobby is today; I remember when we didn't have a Target, and I can recall when Aggie Station, a former bar in Aggieville, burned down. But the thing that has changed most since I started my education at K-State is the relationship scene.

What has surprised me is lately is how everyone seems to talk to only one person and immediately consider himself or herself to be in a relationship. Maybe it is because

I am a fifth-year, and many students my age are getting married, but I feel like a lot of students years younger than I am already are in serious relationships.

I have to ask: what happened to casual dating? Whatever happened to just having fun and getting to know people? It almost seems now that if you kiss someone or go on a date with someone, you're immediately considered "in a relationship"; and if you're in a relationship, the thoughts and talk of getting married to that person come pretty quickly. There is no time even to think!

In 2002, the Census Bureau reported that 50 percent of marriages end in divorce. Half! Doesn't that mean we really should take our time and look at the person we think is "the one"? I am pretty sure no one wants to go through the heartache of divorce, so can't we slow down?

Where did casual dating go? I understand some people are fortunate enough to find the person of their dreams and marry him or her while still in college or immediately after.

But we change after we graduate and get a job. It's like the transition from high school to college; there's a huge growth in your maturity. This is the time to figure out what we want in a person with whom we will spend our entire lives, not to mention the time to develop our personalities and get to know ourselves.

"Early marriage is a key predictor of later divorce," the Atlanta Journal Constitution said in 2005. According to the newspaper, the divorce rate drops to 24 percent for people who marry after age 25.

College used to be about having fun (and I don't mean being promiscuous; I mean fun), meeting people and possibly starting a relationship. But when did a kiss become the beginning of a relationship? And when did a relationship become a marriage proposal?

I am 22 years old, and there is no way I am ready for a serious relationship. I've just gotten started with my life.

My favorite thing to do on a casual date is to eat pizza with a guy and watch a movie. If we get along romantically, great. If we don't, then we'll be friends. There'll be no awkward moment when one has to tell the other the frequent 1980s excuse, "It's not you; it's me."

I'm ready to have fun, meet people and learn about myself. Then when the right guy does come along, I'll be ready to fully make that commitment.

"LET THERE BE A DRAFT..."

KU unlikely to go bowling

Two weeks ago K-State football fans were left with a bitter taste in their mouths after the Wildcats suffered defeat at the hands of in-state rival Kansas. Vengeance might be just two days away.

The official college football bowl selections list will be released Sunday, and there is a good chance Kansas will not be on it.

Kansas' regular-season record (6-6) was good enough to make the team eligible for bowl consideration, but it left the Jayhawks in a tie with Oklahoma State for eighth place in the Big 12 Conference standings.

The Big 12 has contracts with only eight bowl games, which means one of the two teams will not be guaranteed a bowl and will have to hope for an at-large bid selection. Early indications are that Kansas will be the odd team out, largely due to the fact that the Jayhawks have failed to bring large crowds to bowl games in the past.

In 2003, Kansas failed to sell even a quarter of the 12,000 tickets it was allotted for the Tangerine Bowl. Even when the school offered the remaining tickets to students free of charge, several thousand were left over.

If Kansas is, in fact, forced to rely on an at-large bid, it likely will be left out altogether.

A new NCAA rule establishes that all teams with a record better than 6-6, regardless of conference, must be given bowl games before any 6-6 teams can be considered. This leaves Kansas in a precarious position, given that there are 68 bowl eligible teams and only 64 spots available.

Because of the new NCAA rule, it is anticipated Kansas will be staying home, along with other big conference teams like Alabama, Arizona and Washington State. Teams from smaller conferences like Troy, Middle Tennessee and Northern Illinois are expected to go bowling instead.

In fact, CBS.Sportsline.com, MSNBC.com and USAToday.com all have left Kansas off of their bowl projection lists.

While many college football fans will be upset by the new bowl selection system, it is doubtful any complaints will be coming out of Manhattan on Sunday.

K-State looks to recapture Wildcat Classic title after seeing losses in last 2 years of tournament

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After losing the championship game in the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic the past two years, the K-State women's basketball team hopes to return to the top of the annual two-day tournament in Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State lost to St. Joseph's last year by 10 points and to Liberty by 21 the previous year, playing without all-time leading scorer Kendra Wecker, who was injured in the previous game.

"It is a pride thing, too. It is our home court and in front of our fans. It is definitely something we want to get done," senior guard Claire Coggins said.

The Wildcats enter the first game against Mississippi Valley State on Friday with a 4-1 record. The one loss came in the form of a three-point defeat by Wisconsin in the opening round of the UNLV Lady Rebel Shootout last Friday. The team rebounded the next day to beat Elon 75-34.

"We definitely know that we have to work harder, and things are not going to come easy to us," sophomore Marlies Gipson said. "We just have to value our possessions and work as a team."

Kimberly Dietz was named to the All-Tournament team at the UNLV Lady Rebel Shootout after shooting 60 percent from the floor during the two games. She averaged 16 points per game and made 5-of-10 three-point attempts. She said she hopes to continue her solid shooting in this tournament.

"I just try to think how it felt when I was shooting those shots, how was my form and everything," Dietz said. "You just try to tell yourself what you were doing right."

This is the 12th-annual Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic. The Wildcats won the six tournaments prior to their losses in the last two championships. The Wildcats defeated Idaho in the 1999 Wildcat Classic, in the two teams' only previous meeting.

Although all three teams in the tournament have at least one loss, the Wildcats understand they cannot underestimate the competition.

"I think we are starting to get a better feel for each other and starting to get our offense down," Dietz said. "We are coming together well, and I think we will prove that this weekend."

The Wildcats have seen consistent scoring from several players this year. Dietz, Coggins and Gipson have scored in double digits nearly every game this year and average at least 11 points per game.

The Wildcats will face either Alcorn State or Idaho on Saturday. The two losing teams will play at 4 p.m., while the winners will play for the championship at 6 p.m.

FBC | K-State bowl tickets to go on sale beginning 9 a.m. Monday

K-State will begin accepting bowl ticket orders at 9 a.m. Monday, after the announcement of its bowl destination, Director of Athletics Tim Weiser announced Thursday.

Ticket prices and other information will be available as soon as a bowl invitation has been accepted, Weiser said. K-State is not expected to learn its bowl destination until Sunday. The Wildcats are being considered by the Alamo Bowl, Insight Bowl, Brut Sun Bowl, PetroSun Independence Bowl and Texas Bowl.

The easiest method to order tickets is online at www.k-statesports.com, by clicking on the bowl information tab and selecting "Buy Bowl Tickets." Donors to the Ahearn Scholarship Fund and season ticket holders placing online orders should click on the "Donor" button for tickets. Fans also can order in person at the K-State Athletic Ticket Office in Bramlage Coliseum or by calling 1 (800) 221-CATS.

BKC | Kansas coach Self gets 5-year contract extension

LAWRENCE — Kansas basketball coach Bill Self got a five-year contract extension Thursday that bumps up his annual compensation to more than $1.3 million.

Under the deal, which began retroactively on April 1 and goes through March 2011, Self will be paid $220,000 in salary with additional payments for professional services, public relations and promotional duties — boosting his annual compensation to $1.375 million. He could make an additional $350,000 per year if he meets certain incentives. He previously was paid $129,380 in annual salary.

Under the agreement, which athletic director Lew Perkins said took months to finalize, Self also is guaranteed $350,000 from apparel and footwear agreements, $400,000 for professional services, and $250,000 in summer basketball camp revenue.

Self, a four-time finalist for the Naismith Coach of the Year Award, has guided three different teams — Tulsa, Illinois and Kansas — to the quarterfinals of the NCAA Tournament. He's in his fourth year as Kansas' coach, guiding the Jayhawks to a 78-25 record, a share of the last two Big 12 Conference regular-season titles and the championship of the 2006 Big 12 Tournament.

BKC | Minnesota basketball coach Monson resigns after 2-5 start

MINNEAPOLIS — Dan Monson resigned as the men's basketball coach at Minnesota on Thursday, one day after his team's fifth-straight loss.

The Gophers fell to 2-5 with a 90-68 loss at home to Clemson. Minnesota's skid is its worst since a six-game slide during the 1962-63 season.

Monson had come under increasing fire to turn around a once-proud program brought low by an academic fraud scandal under former coach Clem Haskins.

The Gophers emerged from NCAA sanctions in Monson's tenure, but by his eighth season, fans wanted more.

Under Monson, who had a 118-106 overall record but was 44-68 in the Big 10, "The Bam" went from one of the most raucous, difficult places to play in the conference to a lethargic arena with thousands of empty seats.

BKN | Not so desperate, Longoria engaged to Spurs guard Parker

NEW YORK — Her marriage didn't work out on "Desperate Housewives," but things are looking rosy in real life for Eva Longoria: she's engaged to her beau, basketball star Tony Parker.

"Tony flew into Los Angeles last night after his game and surprised Eva at her home as she got off work," Liza Anderson told The Associated Press on Thursday via e-mail.

"The proposal was romantic and perfect." The couple plans to wed in France in summer 2007 in what they describe as a "big, happy ceremony with lots of family and friends."

The 31-year-old Longoria, who plays crafty Gabrielle Solis on the hit ABC show, met Spurs point guard Parker, a 24-year-old Frenchman, in the San Antonio Spurs' locker room after a game two years ago.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State center Jason Bennett steps on the court Saturday at Moby Arena, he'll be able to look eye-to-eye with someone waiting for him on the other end.

The Rams are led by a Goliath of their own in 7-foot, 230-pound center Jason Smith. The junior leads his team with 16.6 points and 10.4 rebounds through the first six games of the season.

On Wednesday, Smith led Colorado State (4-2) to an 81-73 victory at Denver, notching 24 points and nine rebounds.

"I think Jason (Bennett)'s getting better," K-State coach Bob Huggins said. "They're going to have to play against people like this the rest of the way. We might as well get started now."

Huggins was speaking before the Wildcats' (4-2) four-day, two-game road trip that included games at California and Colorado State.

The Golden Bears dominated inside with their two talented big men, Ryan Anderson and DeVon Hardin. That, along with several other factors, contributed to the lopsided 78-48 victory for California on Wednesday night.

Although the outcome was less than desirable, Bennett showed much improvement in the loss. He tied a K-State record with six blocks.

Luis Colon, on the other hand, took one large step backward. He was ejected late in the game for punching California's Taylor Harrison in the back of the head.

Neither Bennett nor Colon has been able to provide much on the offensive end, averaging a combined 3.9 points per game.

Huggins said he expects to see more scoring from the center position in the future.

"That'd sure be nice," Huggins said. "We're just going to have to keep working with them."

As they become more comfortable and we start to pass the ball and make some shots, we'll get them the ball with not as much congestion."

In K-State's 71-67 win over the Rams at Bramlage Coliseum last season, the Wildcats were able to hold Smith to just six points on 0-of-5 shooting from the field.

COLON SUSPENDED

K-State men's basketball coach Bob Huggins announced Thursday that freshman center Colon would be suspended for Saturday's game against Colorado State due to his actions in Wednesday night's game against California.

Colon was ejected after striking Harrison with 6:39 remaining in the second half. Game officials invoked the NCAA rule regarding fighting, resulting in Colon's automatic ejection and subsequent suspension from the team's next game.

Despite plans, circumstances alter proposals

PLANS TO PROPOSE IN STYLE GO AWRY

I had big plans for a nice proposal to my girlfriend while she was off at her internship in New York City. I decided this was the best opportunity for me to pop the question, since we both would be driving back to Manhattan to start the fall semester.

Let's just say things didn't go as planned.

The ring was purchased. I had a game plan. After dinner on a Friday night, I was going to pull the ring out and propose to her, maybe at Central Park or one of the many beautiful areas available in the city.

Well, she broke down crying, talking about how I was never going to marry her. My way to get her to stop crying? Pull out the engagement ring while we were lying in bed. Keep in mind she is still crying at this point.

It wasn't romantic, and it didn't help that the setting was a dingy residence complex at Columbia University.

But I don't think anyone else has story quite like this one.

—By Anthony Mendoza

INSECTS, BIG BEACHES DELAY PROPOSAL

The plan was to pop the question in Pensacola, Fla., which is a short drive from New Orleans. We both enjoy the outdoors and had about $20 between us, so we decided to pitch a tent in the state park and hit the beach the next day.

We awoke the next morning to a line of red ants streaming in through a hole in our tent. These were no ordinary ants — they were like the Mongol Horde of the ant world. Their leader, clearly a brilliant strategist, targeted our suitcases, specifically the undergarments therein.

After about an hour of shaking and swatting, we deemed our suitcases ant-free and headed to the beach.

Perdido Key is a picturesque white-sand beach near Pensacola. We frolicked in the surf and marveled at our good fortune — we practically had the beach to ourselves.

In retrospect, that probably should have raised some sort of red flag. But we were young, in love, and blissfully unaware of the dangers of marine life.

That is, until I felt my face explode in pain, as if I'd been pegged with a cactus.

I had, in fact, been stung by a jellyfish. We had a bottle of mustard in our cooler, which seemed considerably better than urine, the other tried-and-true jellyfish antidote. My girlfriend slathered mustard on my face and neck, but it did nothing to ease the pain. The only effect was to make me smell like a New York City hotdog vendor ... who'd just been stung by a jellyfish.

At this point, it was clear the forces of nature were conspiring to prevent me from proposing. However, what I lacked in charm I made up for in perseverance.

We arrived at Pensacola Beach, which we were assured was free of jellyfish. This, I decided, was the place.

I gave her a notebook with a few assorted memories from our time together. At the end, I wrote "Meet me on the beach."

While she read, I found a secluded spot half a mile away. I spread out a blanket, took the ring from my pocket and waited. And waited. And waited.

Being from the Midwest, there's something I didn't realize about beaches. They're big.

If one is going to find a specific place on said beach, one needs clear directions. Especially if it's dark.

To make a long story short, I spent about an hour wandering the beach, looking for her.

When I finally found her, I decided I should propose before a giant whale emerged from the ocean and swallowed the ring.

Fortunately, she said yes.

Admittedly, it wasn't the smoothest proposal in the history of engagements. However, there was a silver lining.

After that, there was no way she'd ever trust me to plan the wedding.

—By Austin Meek

HE REMEMBERED HER FAVORITE ONE

After the big moment finally comes and you call everyone in your cell phone contact list, people inevitably will ask, "How'd he do it?"

Don't worry. You will get better at telling it, and your story will get more concise.

I met Justin Rice at the end of my freshman year through the rowdy party crowd that was sixth-floor Moore Hall. We started dating my sophomore year, and the rest is history.

Well, not quite.

I'm just excited it's finally here, because we went ring shopping in July. After looking at three or four places and selecting my favorite ring from each, we came to the last store.

The ring had a princess cut center stone and a pavé band both for the engagement ring and wedding band. I fell in love with it and would not take it off. The saleswoman dubbed it the "Heidi ring," and we added the store's business card to the others we'd already collected.

To be honest, I bugged that man for months, worried the ring would be gone once he'd gotten past his "money troubles." Little did I know, those "money troubles" were because he started making payments on my ring the very next day.

Fast forward to Oct. 28. Justin picked me up from the K-State vs. Iowa State football game and drove me home. I had the keys to our apartment in my hand because Justin had to look for his phone in the car, which took only a minute, but I was the one who unlocked the door.

The first words I said as I stepped inside were, "There's a lot of flowers in here."

Justin had searched out 10 dozen roses from every florist in town and placed them in five vases around the living room.

When I turned around, still not thinking anything but, "Aww, how sweet," Justin wasn't there.

Nope, he was down on one knee, with the little white box, grinning at me.

Honeymoon mishaps will occur, so be ready

By Nicole Johnston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While the wedding can be blissful, sometimes honeymoons don't go exactly as planned.

After the stress of my wedding, it was a great feeling to get on the plane to Orlando, Fla., and know the week ahead would be stress-free and wonderful — once we actually got on the plane, that is.

The first mistake I made was the biggest and almost cost us the entire trip. I'll never forget standing in the airport at 4 a.m. putting my credit card in the machine to print off our tickets and seeing a message that read, "You can only print your tickets off on the day of your flight."

That wasn't exactly what I was expecting. After trying three times, I asked the woman working there. She said I had purchased tickets for the next day, and I immediately freaked out. After the woman told us we'd have to pay $400 to change the ticket date, I knew I had screwed up big. There was nothing we could do, though, because our cruise was scheduled to leave that day. We had to pay the money or waste a cruise in the Caribbean.

The clerk told us she'd be right back, and as soon as she left, I felt the salty tears roll down my cheeks. But we had the amazing luck of newlyweds, because she returned to the desk and said, "Happy honeymoon. We are waiving the fee."

I can't even explain how lucky we were there was even a flight at the time we needed.

This leads me to Lesson One for honeymooners — pay attention to every detail, including flight dates.

Lesson Two, keep track of your life-in-a-bag — your makeup bag.

Somehow, in the scramble to leave the church and go to the reception, someone picked up my makeup bag by mistake. If you are any sort of girly girl, you will relate to me and agree that it's kind of impossible to go on your honeymoon without your makeup bag. I had to pick through my mom's makeup to find some that would make do for the trip. Obviously, I was not thrilled. However, I survived and enjoyed the first five nights of my cruise.

But on the sixth night, I was really glad I had makeup, because I needed it to cover a bruise on the bridge of my nose. I remember it like yesterday.

"Oh, look, the wind is 40 mph," I said as we walked up to the top deck.

You would think all the lawn chairs closing would be a good sign not to sit in them, but nothing triggered. As I tried to take my seat, the back of my chair slammed into the bridge of my nose. Try to imagine what a metal bar flying at 40 mph feels like on your nose. Needless to say, it was painful and left a lasting impression.

The main lesson of the trip was to pay attention. Soon-to-be honeymooners, accept that something semi-unfortunate is bound to happen, and pay attention to your surroundings.

Hopefully you can dodge that killer lawn chair before it attacks.

Use fun cards to save wedding date

The new year brings a lot of plans: resolutions, goals, conferences, appointments, trips...

That is why this time of year is the most important time to make sure all of your guests-to-be know the date of your wedding. The importance of save-the-date cards increases if the big day falls during peak wedding and vacation months like June and July.

Here are some fun ways to help your guests remember to save the date.

Emily Lawrence | COLLEGIAN

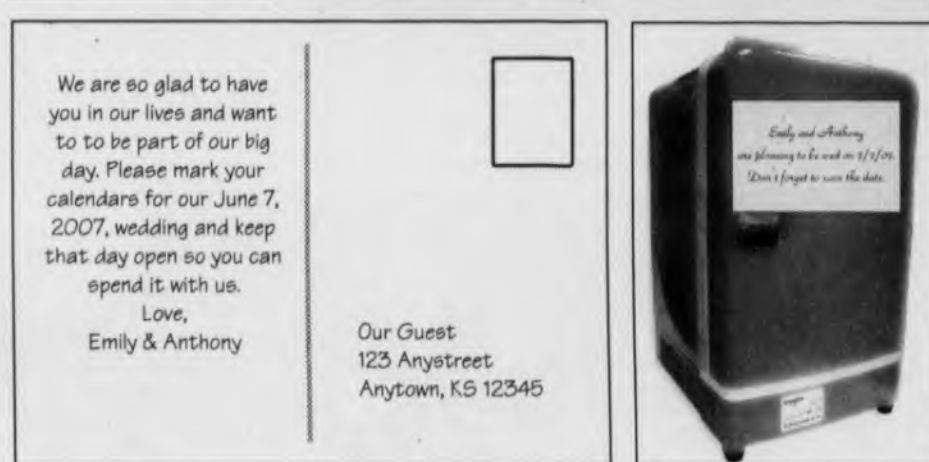

1. Picture perfect: Planning a formal wedding? This save-the-date card is the perfect place to let your fun side show. For this photo booth card, get four pieces of cardstock and write "save," "the," "date," and your date on each. Find an old photo booth and smile away, showing the cards in order, one per frame.

2. Stick to it: Most people will mark their calendars, but this fun save-the-date card will make them remember. Sticker sheets are available at any office supply store. Find a wall calendar and scan the date of your wedding onto your computer. Make a note to save the date on the image and print a note card. Next, measure the size of the date square and print a save-the-date sticker that will fit in its place. Cut out the sticker, including its backing, and affix with double-sided tape to the calendar square.

3. Breaking news: So you've already run your engagement announcement in the local newspaper, and there are copies of it lying around. Why not use them to help communicate the date of your wedding? Tear out the announcement and scan it. Circle the date in a paint program and print the announcement. The final step is to cut and adhere to a blank note card with matching envelopes.

4. Post it: For affordable save-the-date customs, postcards are both easy and classy. Web sites like Vistaprint.com have inexpensive custom postcards. The site has templates as well as the capability to upload custom designs. As a plus, you'll save on postage.

5. Attracted like magnets: When your guests see a reminder of your big day every time they open their refrigerator, you can be assured they won't forget. There are several Web sites that print custom magnets and printable magnet sheets, but the easiest way to make a save-the-date card magnetic is to use magnets designed to turn business cards into magnets. Available at office supply stores, they are easy to use. Most word processors have downloadable business card templates that can be used to create your announcement in the proper dimensions. For a fun twist, print an old refrigerator on a note card and stick the magnet to it.

after the $500 deductible is paid.

The MEGA Life plan has an out-of-pocket maximum of $1,500 per year. After that is reached, the insurance company will pay the rest of the bill.

The lifetime maximum is $100,000 per year, and must be purchased annually. Medical bills will not be paid by the insurance after the policyholder's bills reach $100,000 in a year.

After a student graduates, the insurance is dropped.

However there are benefits to the MEGA Life plan, said Fred Brock, author of "Health Care on Less Than You Think" and assistant professor of journalism and mass communications.

"The best part about the university plan is that it will accept you even if you have pre-existing conditions," he said.

Elmore said he considered buying the insurance plan after he was no longer insured.

"I looked into it, but then I thought that $800 could've went to something else rather than insurance," he said.

STUDENT HEALTH INSURANCE

The Time Insurance plan is available for students enrolled in a college or university and is separate from the plan offered solely to Kansas Board of Regents students.

This student health insurance plan can be found on eHealthInsurance.com, a Web site that presents health insurance information for consumers. The cost is $829 per year.

This insurance reimburses policyholders for medical service regardless of who provides the service, although this reimbursement might be limited. The deductible is $1,000 per year.

Co-payments are not required in this plan, but prescription drugs are not covered.

The co-insurance is 20 percent of all medical bills after the $1,000 deductible. The insurance company will begin to pay 80 percent of medical expenses after the policyholder pays $1,000 in medical bills.

When the plan's $3,000 out-of-pocket maximum is reached, the insurance company pays 100 percent of a bill. This limit includes the $1,000 deductible.

This plan has a lifetime maximum of $1 million.

Brock said the plan is a good option because it covers students after graduation.

"This plan will cover students until they are 30 years old, and by that time they can find insurance through their job, which most of them will do," he said.

HEALTH SAVINGS ACCOUNT

Humana offers a health insurance plan that allows policyholders to save while paying for their health insurance. Health savings accounts are linked to a tax-free savings account that can be used to pay medical bills before the deductible is met and the insurance kicks in.

This plan costs about $1,148 per year or $95.64 per month and also can be found on eHealthInsurance.com. The deductible is $2,600, which also is the maximum amount a policyholder can invest in this HSA.

Investment options are up to the consumer, Brock said.

Money from this account cannot pay the premium or the plan's cost. However, this money can be withdrawn for non-medical expenses. If a policyholder chooses this option, he or she must pay taxes on that money and a 10-percent penalty on the amount withdrawn.

There is a co-insurance of 20 percent, and the out-of-pocket maximum is $2,000.

This plan has a lifetime maximum of $5 million per person for the policyholder's lifetime.

Brock said an HSA plan is beneficial because it can help a policyholder save money.

For example, if the deductible is $2,000, a policyholder would invest $2,000 into his or her HSA account to help cover medical expenses.

"The only reason you would use that is to pay for medical expenses that are part of the deductible," Brock said. "The only way that it would be bad is if you had more medical expenses than your deductible, but most people don't have that," Brock said.

For young, healthy people, the HSA can be a smart choice, Brock said.

"If you don't buy student health insurance, it's not that much more expensive, and you can keep it forever," he said.

PAGEANT | Contestants prepare for 3 months

cash prize and advances to a regional competition that includes 10 other states. From there, she can advance to the national competition, Gladney said.

Although the pageant is competitive, Margaret Turner, choreographer and co-pageant coordinator, said she emphasizes sisterhood while training the women for the competition.

"After every practice, me and the girls talk about any issues they may have with school, and then we close by getting in a circle and having prayer," Turner said.

Turner, who was the Classy Cat coordinator in 1995, said she critiques the women's talent and gives suggestions, but she only coordinates the group choreography.

One of Turner's most memorable moments from the pageant was a contestant, Megan Smith, who competed in the pageant four times, finally winning it in her senior year.

The next year, Turner said Smith was instrumental in organizing the pageant. As an apparel and textile major, she designed and sewed the contestant's outfits for the opening act.

"It is really interesting and a blessing to see a girl who's shy and can't even walk in heels, turn into a completely different person the night of the pageant," Turner said.

Brittany Foster, sophomore in apparel textile and contestant in this year's pageant, said the hardest part of preparing for the pageant was finding a balance between practice, class, extracurricular activities and time for herself.

The contestants practice four hours a night, three nights a week, for three months, Foster said.

"We don't just put the girls up on stage; we do it with class. They put lots of time and effort into this pageant, and it shows," Clark said. "We have one night to make Forum Hall into something spectacular."

Tickets are $10 and can be purchased for the event from a contestant or Alpha Phi Alpha member before 5 p.m. today. They can be purchased at the door for $15.

Spice it up

8 hot dates add flavor to any relationship

Just about anyone could argue the importance of dating at any stage in your life. Whether you are single, in a relationship, engaged or married, the act of going out with a friend, boyfriend, girlfriend, fiancé or spouse allows for a healthy bonding experience.

When a couple has been together for a long time, dates or outings might become humdrum, and it can turn into the following awful age-old battle:

"What do you want to do tonight?"

"I don't know. What do you want to do tonight?"

"I don't know. I picked last time. It's your turn."

Often when this argument occurs, the mood for the whole evening sours, feelings are hurt, and overall grouchiness prevails.

Never fear. There are many ways to avoid this nasty brawl, and I encourage people to be as creative as possible to maintain a relationship.

As a couple, sit down and try to come up with a list of random activities you might enjoy doing together. Try to get out of the normal swing of things. Step out of the college atmosphere by avoiding conventional ideas like going to the bars, house parties or just hanging out with friends. Consider activities that involve art, the great outdoors, food, film, travel, etc. Here are some things that would make for great dating alternatives you might not have considered.

1. GET OUT OF TOWN

Pack up the car and take a field trip. Couples can drive to a nearby city like Lawrence or the Kansas City area for a day trip. When you're out of your Manhattan comfort zone, you're more likely to pay more attention to one another. Touring another location will be a refreshing change of scenery for both of you.

2. BREATHE FRESH AIR

Plan a trip to the zoo, take a stroll in the park, follow a walking trail, or explore your local cemetery. Sunset Zoological Park is an excellent location to visit. The zoo is open noon to 5 p.m. Admission is $4 for adults, $2 for children ages 3-12, and free for children under 2 years old.

Manhattan's ice rink, located in City Park, also offers a winter weather dating option for those seeking adventure. The rink is open 3:30-8 p.m. weekdays. On weekends, the rink opens at 1 p.m. both days and closes at 7 p.m. Saturdays and 8 p.m. Sundays. Admission and skate rental are $1.50 each.

Since we students spend so much time indoors with class and homework, fresh air and exercise will improve mental and physical health.

3. BE CREATIVE

Even if neither of you are fine arts majors, you still can find a way to enjoy art. Buy a few tubes of paint, some brushes and canvas, and go wild. Or take an art class together. You can learn a new trade together and express yourselves artistically at the same time.

Art classes are offered at a number of locations in town. The Manhattan Arts Center offers classes for those who want to get creative. The center also features music and performing arts events throughout the year. For more information, visit www.manhattanarts.org.

4. INDULGE IN FOOD

Cook an elaborate meal together. Be experimental and try to create something that's not part of your normal menu.

5. MAKE EACH OTHER OVER

Style each other's hair or clothing. This doesn't have to extend as far as scissors or hair dye, but it certainly could. You'll both get a kick out of the styles your significant other devises, and who knows, maybe you'll have a new 'do and a new stylist. If you're a girl, let your guy apply your makeup, and if you're a guy, let your girl shave your face. Or browse some of Aggieville's smaller boutiques for clothing styles you might not find at the mall.

6. BREAK OUT OF THE NORM

Instead of going out, stay in and rent a movie. If you're feeling adventurous, find a foreign film with subtitles. The Manhattan Public Library offers free movie and DVD rentals. If nothing else, you and your significant other can bond over the fact that neither of you can understand what the people in the movie are saying.

7. CREATE A SCAVENGER HUNT

Either the guy or girl in the relationship can create a fun scavenger hunt for the other with riddles and questions that will make your loved one travel around town. The quest could end with a romantic picnic atop one of Manhattan's many scenic overlooks.

8. DRESS UP

Whoever said prom dresses were reserved exclusively for prom? Find a fancy outfit from high school and go out for a night on the town.

When couples come up with good date ideas, they can begin a collection or "date jar" with a plethora of ideas for when they don't know what to do. Hopefully this sort of preparation can end the "What-should-we-do-tonight?" debate before it starts.

Reviewer approves alternative, simple albums

The Slip's "Eisenhower"

Grade: A-

The Slip's first album with Bar/None Records and the band's second overall studio effort is an echoing, thunderous, jam-band epic and possibly the best album of its kind since the 2005 release "Z" by My Morning Jacket, with whom The Slip will be touring soon.

Hem "Funnel Cloud"

Grade: A-

"Funnel Cloud" is a beautiful, gentle whirlwind of alternative country-pop lullabies, sounding much like a Ryan Adams record if he were to hand the microphone over to a female vocalist. In this case, the female vocalist is Sally Ellyson, who possesses a breathy, breezy whisper that has the ability to erupt when necessary, like in "Not California," the album's signature track.

The Evens "Get Evens"

Grade: B+

Blending together Ian MacKaye's dry, crunching, baritone guitar riffs and the complex rhythms of Amy Farina's percussion, The Evens' second album, "Get Evens," creates a sturdy song craft that resembles that of Yo La Tengo.

The Blow "Paper Television"

Grade: B+

This female duo creates a collection of simple, electronica, indie-pop tunes with marching-band beats. Khaela Maricich's deep, cutting lyrics beautifully contrast with her innocent sounding voice.

Beyond color

A look at the lives of interracial couples reveals triumphs, downfalls on road to acceptance

E.J. Arnold, senior in milling management, and Audra Gardener, senior in apparel textile marketing, said they get double-takes from people because they are an interracial couple.

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lindsay Goll | COLLEGIAN

It's been 40 years since the U.S. Supreme Court overturned laws against interracial marriage in the case of Loving v. Virginia.

But are we now colorblind to mixed-race couples?

The United States has a history riddled with fighting racial segregation and laws enforcing social boundaries. Jim Crow laws, state and local regulations enforcing the segregation of race in the South and throughout the United States, were in place in the country from the late 1800s through 1967.

The U.S. population recently passed 300 million. According to the 2000 U.S. Census, there are about 54.5 million married couples in the country. More than 4 million couples are mixed-race couples.

Here are the stories of five couples. As individuals, they have different backgrounds, beliefs and cultures. As couples, they fight to break the mold and see love without seeing color.

RAMONA AND EMANUEL

Ramona and Emanuel Arnold met at a discotheque in Germany in 1973 and have been together ever since.

Even after 30 years of marriage, the difference in their races is something they overcome daily. Ramona is German. Emanuel is black.

Emanuel was in the Army when he met Ramona. He said he never heard any objections from his friends about their relationship, although he suspected they had a different outlook on life than most.

Emanuel said his family accepted Ramona immediately, but even if race had been an issue, he decided long ago to accept people as they are.

"I made a decision as a teenager," he said, "I don't see color when I talk to people. A person is a person."

Ramona's mother was a refugee from Poland, and her father originally was from Romania. Ramona said her parents already had experienced cultural differences when they were together. When she and Emanuel began their relationship, no issue arose from her parents except a genuine concern for their daughter's well-being.

"My mother said, 'Are you sure you want to do this? You're going to have so many problems,'" Ramona said.

People will look, Ramona and Emanuel said, but the couple said they have always sought to be around people who are accepting.

"We kind of moved in circles where it was acceptable," Ramona said. "It was OK, and we were so much younger then, and we didn't care."

"We were going to do what we were going to do. I think it just drew us closer together."

AUDRA AND E.J.

Ramona and Emanuel live in Manhattan and have two sons.

One of their sons, E.J. Arnold, senior in milling management, said he has seen his parents break new ground in their relationship.

K-State to face No. 16 Rutgers in Texas Bowl

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State football team will be spending its holiday season in Texas this year. However, it won't be playing in the Alamo Bowl.

Instead, the Wildcats (7-5) will face No. 16 Rutgers (10-2) in the Texas Bowl on Dec.

28, said Tim Weiser, director of the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. The game will be played at Reliant Stadium in Houston. Television: NFL Network. K-State's ticket allotment: 10,500. Ticket prices: $35-$75.

K-State vs. Rutgers

Time: 7 p.m. Dec. 28
Where: Reliant Stadium, Houston
Television: NFL Network
K-State's ticket allotment: 10,500
Ticket prices: $35-$75

The Alamo Bowl selected fourth out of the Big 12 Conference's eight bowl games. It chose Texas to represent the Big 12 and play Iowa.

According to a Nov. 24 article in The Kansas City Star, the Alamo Bowl had high interest in selecting either K-State or Texas Tech to fill its Big 12 commitment.

Weiser said the Insight and Independence Bowls also expressed interest in Student dies Thursday night; cause unknown

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A K-State graduate student in geography died Thursday.

Mary Dobbs, 44, died in her sleep Thursday night, said Richard Marston, head of the Department of Geography.

Marston said Sunday evening the cause of Dobbs' death is unknown.

The Department of Social Sciences at Emporia State University, where Dobbs worked as a teacher, first heard of Dobbs' death Friday afternoon from her ex-husband, said Ellen Hansen, chair of the department at Emporia State. Hansen then told K-State.

Lisa Harrington, professor of geography, was Dobbs' doctoral adviser. She said she had a comfortable relationship with Dobbs.

"She was about the hardest worker I ever met," Harrington said. "She juggled taking care of her family as a single mother, working as a student at K-State and teaching at Emporia State."

Dobbs was the mother of three children and an instructor of geography at Emporia State University.

"She was a very sweet person. She was very enthusiastic about teaching at Emporia State," Hansen said.

Dobbs was the first doctoral student in the K-State geography department to receive a grant from the National Science Foundation to do research. Her research topic was "The economic impact of the conservative reserve program on households and counties in the Great Plains."

As of Sunday evening, no information on a memorial service for Dobbs was available.

Choirs, bell ringers perform holiday music numbers

By Hannah Sanders
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All Faiths Chapel was filled with holiday music Sunday afternoon.

The K-State Singers, Cadence, Men and Women's Glee clubs, Rhapsody Ringers and two organists performed a holiday song compilation. Gerald Polich directed the vocal choirs, and Judy Scharmann directed the bell choir.

K-State Women's Glee performed five songs, including Christmas favorites like "Silent Night."

"I enjoy it, because it's a class that helps me relax," said Nakayla Robbs, sophomore in animal science and member of the Women's Glee.

The Women's Glee has class twice a week in addition to about an hour of individual practice to prepare for the concerts, Robbs said. Her favorite song the club performed was "A Christmas Festival."

The Men's Glee Club performed seven songs in a compilation of classic holiday tunes and unusual choices like "Tomorrow Shall be My Dancing Day."

Tyler Geisler, freshman in construction science and management and member of the Men's Glee Club, said he enjoys being a part of the club.

"It is a big stress reliever," Geisler said.

He said his favorite song of the men's performance was "Noel!"

"It has good rhythm between the parts, and it exemplifies the holiday spirit," Geisler said.

The K-State Singers, a more selective choir of students who sing and dance, performed three songs with a small jazz band.

Flu vaccine

Lafene Health Center received more flu vaccines. The vaccine can be given to those 18 and older and is now available to spouses and adult children of faculty, staff and students. The injection form of the vaccine is $14 for students and $19 for guests. It is $30 for students and $35 for guests for the nasal mist version.

Faculty award

Cristian Morosan, assistant professor in hotel, restaurant and institution management and dietetics, won the 2006 Dean Barbara S. Stowe Endowed Faculty Development Fund Award from the College of Human Ecology. He will be honored at the fall 2006 commencement ceremony at 9 a.m. Dec. 9 in McCain Auditorium.

Alumnus honor

Dr. Manuel Thomas will be honored by the College of Veterinary Medicine and the Veterinary Medicine Alumni Association with the Alumni Recognition Award at the American Association of Equine Practitioners annual conference today in San Antonio, Texas. Thomas received his doctor of veterinary medicine degree from K-State in 1996.

FEMALE FOOTBALL PLAYER SIGNS COPIES OF BOOK

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Turning her life story into a book has been a bittersweet experience for Katie Hnida.

"It's kind of nice to have my story out there in my own words, because so much has been misreported, and people have all these opinions and different things," she said. "It's good to have it out there. It's kind of funny to have your life story out there and all these things that are so personal, but at the same time, it is really good."

Hnida, a former kicker for the University of New Mexico football team, signed copies of her book

"Still Kicking: My Journey as the First Woman to Play Division I Football" at the Bookstore Thursday.

The book chronicles her days playing at the University of Colorado and the abuse she said she suffered there and also recounts her time as a Lobo, where she said she was welcomed with open arms and treated like a teammate.

OHIO STATE U. OFFERS FREE HIV TESTING

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Each year 20,000 people under age 25 in the United States are infected with HIV, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Even more startling is that one in 251 college students are HIV-positive, and 90 percent of them do not know it.

The Student Wellness Center is working to change that by offering free HIV testing. Free anonymous HIV testing and counseling is offered daily by appointment. The tests do not involve needles or blood and are 99 percent effective, according to the Wellness Center. They are administered by trained student volunteers, but can be done by professionals if requested.

KENT STATE U. STUDENTS YELL TO RELIEVE STRESS

KENT, Ohio — Five, four, three, two, one — "AHHH!" Students' brains might be overloaded, but their lungs are in good shape.

At 8:05 p.m. Friday, students screamed their end-of-the-semester frustrations out in the campus' first Kent State University SCREAM Day.

About 40 students attended the mud- and rain-filled event in the lawn near the Centennial Court residence halls.

"It turned into Kent State mud day, rather than scream day, but it was a success," creator Ryan Jenks said.

Pageant experiences technical scoring difficulties

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Due to technical difficulties with the scoring system, 12 contestants and their audience waited almost two hours Saturday evening to find out who will be Miss Black and Gold 2006.

"In all of the years we have had this pageant, nothing like this has ever happened," said Brandon Clark, Alpha adviser for the Kappa Tau chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha.

Except the technical delay, the pageant ran smoothly for the nearly packed house in Forum Hall.

The pageant was created to uplift and encourage African-American women, said Abdul Yahaya, president of Alpha Phi Alpha.

"We had a great turnout and record ticket sales. We were excited to see the outcome in attendance and in the performance of the girls," Yahaya said.

The pageant included entertainment for the more than 500 audience members.

"There were all different kinds of people here. I feel it's good, because it gives us a chance to break the stereotypes people have against black people," said Makayla Lyons, sophomore in political science and former Miss Black and Gold contestant.

The contestants competed in five areas: career and personal introduction, talent, swimwear, evening wear and question-and-answer.

Tiffany Bean, sophomore in environmental design, said the pageant was entertaining.

"I really liked the crowd participation, the praise dance and the Alphas' step routine," she said.

Saturday was a special night for fraternity members not only because of the pageant, but also because it was the 100th anniversary of the historically black fraternity.

There were many different talents displayed, including contemporary dance to music from Beyoncé and Janet Jackson, African dance, praise dance, baton twirling, recitation of original and written poetry and a cappella singing, with music and with the crowd.

Contestant Deborah Muhwezi got the crowd to participate with a medley of songs dedicated to women, like Aretha Franklin's "Respect."

For some, one of the most shocking events of the night was contestant Brittany Foster's response to the question, "Is America ready for a black president?"

"Yes, anyone can do a better job than Bush," Foster said.

Some said they thought her answer could have been rephrased.

"I feel that her answer was good. However, it could have been worded differently to not seem so harsh," Lyons said.

Throughout the pageant, fraternity member and event emcee Paris Rossiter made sure the crowd respected the women as they performed.

"These ladies have been working diligently for four months to get up onstage before you. Please show them your utmost respect," Rossiter said.

Many audience members were anxious to learn who won, but some could not stay to hear the announcement because the wait kept the audience in Forum Hall until 12:45 a.m.

Some of the contestants' family members said they could not stay because of long rides home.

"The waiting is very frustrating, but it is a true test of our character to see if we can keep our composure," Muhwezi said.

LaKrystal McKnight, sophomore pre-professional education; Naomi Moka-Moliki, senior in mass communications; Brittany Foster, freshman in apparel marketing and design; and Jasmine Smith, freshman in open option; pose as the rest of the contestants of the Eighth Annual Miss Black and Gold Pageant enter the stage in Forum Hall on Saturday night.

LaKrystal McKnight was crowned Miss Gold, winning a $200 book scholarship and the co-chairmanship of the auxiliary community service for Alpha Phi Alpha.

The title of Miss Black and Gold 2006 was bestowed upon Amber Taylor, who received a $300 book scholarship and admission into the regional Miss Black and Gold pageant.

TO THE POINT Heritage, colorblindness key for kids

Interracial relationships are increasing, and with them, the number of biracial and multiracial children.

In "Beyond color" on Page 1, Juanita McGowan, director of K-State's American Ethnic Studies, is quoted as saying, "One of the greatest challenges I've seen is helping the child identify what they're going to be called."

We have a responsibility to raise not only our children, but also all the children in our society to be colorblind, viewing people as people, and aware of their personal heritage.

At the same time, racial identifications are statistically important every day. From testing to census reports, all children need to be prepared to mark their racial identities. The process of teaching children to classify themselves, though seemingly a contradiction to colorblindness, is both challenging and necessary.

Like teaching a child self-defense, the process could rob children of their innocence, but it is crucial knowledge in the construct of our society.

Most importantly, children need to be taught to identify themselves by their personal cultures and heritages, not a statistical blank.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Walk the talk

Hot topics require actions by individuals, not endless discussion by media

There were many topics covered in the Collegian this semester, and I can guarantee the list included the following: abortion, education, gay rights, the environment, tobacco, AIDS and poverty. These topics (and many others) will continue to be in U.S. newspapers because they are "hot topics." But because these issues are discussed so frequently, it begs the question — are they now ignored simply because of the questions they bring up?

Often each article or reporter raises the same questions that already have been beaten into the ground by everyone else. It certainly would be a travesty to realize no one cares about these issues anymore, because they are overhyped and discussed every single day by the media.

The irony of all this publicity is that it somehow does more harm than good. Many people often skip articles on abortion or AIDS, because they think they already know all about it. But while people seem to know everything about rape or tobacco, they do not act upon the information they have been given.

However, what is the proper action to take? If the media stops hawking these issues, they might be forgotten; if they are discussed continuously, it most likely will produce a similar outcome.

Instead of beating the fundamentals of these issues into the ground, the media and lobbyists who want to produce a campaign focused on what gets people's attention in today's society should work together to broadcast possible pathways toward change.

Good examples of these efforts that have received attention and produced results are the PRODUCT(red) campaign by U2 rock group leader Bono that gives money to fight AIDS and other problems in third-world countries, and the TRUTH campaign against tobacco. Sometimes going to extremes, like leading demonstrations in the middle of a crowded street or going shopping with Oprah Winfrey, is the only way to get the focus on the issues that need it most.

So, before turning off the television when the news reports on the AIDS epidemic or the situation in Darfur, take a few minutes to learn about the issue and see what you can do to make a difference. Even driving less or donating a piece of old clothing can allay many of the problems our country (and our world) faces today.

Many people fail to realize that blocking out information or ignoring problems will not make them go away. Gay people will still want to get married, people will continue to pay $5 for a pack of cigarettes, women will still want the right to have an abortion, and global warming will continue to make the temperature 70 degrees one day and 20 the next.

Kelsey Childress is a junior in free-styling. She is spending next semester in seduction to avoid again hearing the comment, "Wow, you look a lot better in person than in your Collegian picture!" Please telepathically send your comments to opinion@pub.ksu.edu.

Dead week makes scholars out of semester slackers

Formula for a semester: classes begin with high ambition and a decent work ethic. Weeks pass, the novelty wears off, and laziness begins to take control. The months go by with sporadic bursts of motivation that break up the general lukewarm sentiments about work. Finally, the end nears, and suddenly everyone is a scholar.

Dead week is officially here. Technically speaking, "dead week" is the nightmarish week before final exams. During this span of time, students study like it's going out of style — a joke, of course, because everyone knows studying is always fashionable, much like blue jeans or leather jackets. This week is an opportunity to make up for a semester's worth of ignoring reading assignments and sleeping through lectures.

Students suddenly develop an affinity for Hale Library, a marked interest in extra credit projects, and a desire for a strong academic bond with their professors.

All-nighters likely will ensue for the especially desperate and the especially studious.

Students hope hard work during dead week will bring a spontaneous recovery to their grades. After carefully reviewing grades so far for the semester, students either will find themselves naively computing, "OK, to get a B overall, all I have to do is get 100 percent on the final," or asking themselves, "Is it too late to drop?" Some unnecessarily dramatic people might experience at least one minor emotional breakdown as a result of the stress.

Later, exams. Some will be rewarded for their reading; others punished for their procrastination.

But soon the dreaded time will be over. Finals will be taken. Everyone will make a solemn, whole-hearted vow to start off right next semester. And for a nearly month-long break, the only studying to be done will be the back of cereal box as you eat breakfast when you finally roll out of bed at 1 p.m.

There's time for work and time for play, and the last-ditch opportunity for better grades that dead week supplies is a time for work for most of us.

But the intense studying will come to an end, break will come, a new semester will start, and the whole dance will begin again.

From the Public Editor: Journalists' 7 sins of muddy reporting

Throughout my fledgling career there have been warnings of things I must never do if I want to succeed in this industry. These lessons are familiar to young journalists and form the basic rules that keep this industry going.

Each rule has its subtleties, but they can be sorted into what I consider the "Seven Deadly Sins" of journalism.

laziness or negligence, headline-writers' heads could roll.

PLAGIARISM
It's a lot harder to avoid this in journalism than you might think. It takes years to gain an understanding of proper attribution in this field, but blatant cutting and pasting is a no-brainer.

LOGAN C. ADAMS

FABRICATION
This arguably is the ugliest, nastiest and dirtiest of them all. This sin refers to when a journalist knowingly makes something up and publishes it as true. It is bound to get a journalist fired.

There was an allegation of this very sin last month when a reporter wildly misquoted a source. The reporter was new and didn't know all the rules as well as he should have, but I doubt he'll make the same mistake again.

INACCURACY
This category is a grab bag and includes factual errors, misquotation, incorrect context and anything else that can cause a paper to print something untrue.

This happens by accident and is expected due to the inherent fallibility of people. However, if it is the result of things when they make up their minds too early.

ARROGANCE
I'm certainly not innocent on this count. Journalism requires a strong dose of confidence; how else does a person question the powerful? The problem is that this job has a way of sneaking past a humble person's safeguards and going straight to the head.

The best treatment is well-aimed bits of criticism delivered to the ego regularly. Chronic cases might require well-aimed blunt-force trauma delivered to the head.

PROSTITUTION
When they take money or favors to promote a point of view or when they forsake their own opinions for those pushed upon them, journalists stop being independent minds and become property.

Most professional journalists today, including those at the Collegian, work with principles that forbid them from accepting anything that would compromise their integrity and independence.

However, I've never seen reporters refuse a free lunch buffet at a press conference.

K-State chapter celebrates centennial of national fraternity

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men of Alpha Phi Alpha celebrate their national centennial today and recognize a century of brotherhood and service.

The fraternity, which was started on Dec. 4, 1906, at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., originally was founded as a study and support group for minority students who experienced racial prejudice, both academically and socially.

"The half-dozen African-American students at Cornell University during the school year of 1904 and (19)05 did not return to campus the following year," said Darryl R. Matthews Sr., General President of Alpha Phi Alpha, on the fraternity's Web site. "The incoming students in 1905, in founding Alpha Phi Alpha, were determined to bind themselves together to ensure that each would survive in the racially hostile environment."

At K-State, Alpha Phi Alpha was installed as a chapter on April 15, 1976, and is the oldest African-American fraternity on campus.

Alpha Phi Alpha is the first intercollegiate fraternity established by African-Americans. Some of its famous alumni include W.E.B. DuBois, Jesse Owens, Duke Ellington, Edward Brooke, Thurgood Marshall, Andrew Young and Martin Luther King, Jr.

Alpha Phi Alpha has initiated more than 175,000 men and has been open to men of all races since 1945. There are more than 700 Alpha Phi Alpha chapters in the Americas, Europe, Asia and the West Indies.

"Being a part of something with as great a legacy as Alpha Phi Alpha is truly an honor," said Pat Agwu, K-State graduate student in curriculum and instruction and member of Alpha Phi Alpha.

The official Alpha Phi Alpha centennial celebration took place in July with a convention in Washington, D.C., called "Reflects on Rich Past, Looks Toward Bright Future."

Beginning with a speech on Capitol Hill, U.S. Congressman and Alpha member David Scott presented the House of Representatives with new legislation that recognized and honored Alpha Phi Alpha for its accomplishments and its historic milestone.

"Mr. Speaker, it is an honor and special privilege to address this great body on such an auspicious occasion," said Scott, D-GA.

"As a proud member of this fraternity, I feel special esteem in joining the entire House to recognize the historical significance of the centennial anniversary of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc."

The legislation, titled House Concurrent Resolution 384, passed with unanimous consent.

The bill was co-sponsored by the eight Congressmen who are alumni of the fraternity.

At K-State, the fraternity members organized a variety of events to celebrate the centennial.

On Saturday night, the fraternity had its annual Miss Black and Gold pageant, a pageant featuring 12 nominated contestants from K-State.

"Miss Black and Gold is always a great event for Alpha Phi Alpha," Agwu said. "The contestants were all very talented women, and we were happy they chose to be part of the event."

The members also had a reception for alumni in honor of the milestone.

The members of Alpha Phi Alpha said the centennial event not only was exciting, but also it helped remind them of their pledge to an amazing organization and legacy of brotherhood.

"We are very excited about our milestone," Agwu said.

"Events like this seem to re-energize our efforts in Alpha Phi Alpha."

South continues Big 12 reign

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — On paper, this looked like the most evenly-matched Big 12 Conference championship game in half a decade.

AUSTIN
MEEK

On the field, it looked like just another South-Division smack-down. Oklahoma beat Nebraska 21-7, but the game didn't seem that close.

"We didn't get it done. We didn't play good enough. We didn't coach good enough," Nebraska coach Bill Callahan said.

Statistically, this game was much more competitive than the last two Big 12 championships. Of course, that's not saying much.

To appreciate just how ugly the last two Big 12 championship games were, consider this: when Nebraska scored a touchdown in the second quarter, it was the first title-game TD for the North since 2003.

It's safe to say this wasn't what the Big 12 bigwigs had in mind when the super-conference was born.

This conference was supposed to produce compelling late-season matchups, TV darlings with title-game implications. But in the conference's 11-year history, only three championship games have featured two Top-10 teams.

Suffice it to say, Big 12 title games have a history of bad match-ups and lopsided outcomes.

This game was no different, despite the rich tradition between the two programs.

Oklahoma led for 59 minutes and 12 seconds, a title-game record. Nebraska's first two plays were an ill-conceived reverse on the opening kickoff and fumble on the first play from scrimmage.

From that disastrous opening sequence to the game's final play, it was clear the best athletes and coaches were wearing Sooners red.

Oklahoma exploited Nebraska's secondary. Wide receiver Malcolm Kelly shredded the Cornhuskers for a title-game record 142 yards and two touchdowns.

Meanwhile, Nebraska's passing game smacked of desperation. Quarterback Zac Taylor threw the ball 50 times, completing just 23 with three interceptions.

Now, after the latest Big 12 beat-down, the question remains, is the Big 12 North closing the gap?

Look at it this way. The best North team in three years held Oklahoma to 42 rushing yards, pinned the Sooners inside their own 20 six times and still never had a chance.

Progress or frustration?

Either way, the South is king once again.

"We didn't match up real well," Callahan said. "They took advantage of everything. They just played better."

"I have no excuses up here to-night."

Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic

Champions ... again

The K-State women's basketball team celebrates its win over Alcorn State 81-41 Saturday in the title game of the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic. It was the first time the Wildcats won the tournament since 2003.

Wildcats defeat Alcorn State to take tournament title

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team used a solid defensive performance, along with a big game from sophomore forward Marlies Gipson, to defeat Alcorn State 81-41 to win the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic championship Saturday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

It was the first time since 2003 the Wildcats (6-1) were able to win the tournament.

Gipson had a team-high 16 points — converting 6-of-8 shots from the floor — and earned tournament Most Valuable Player honors. Gipson finished the tournament with 29 points and 12 rebounds.

"She's just been tremendous, very consistent," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "The thing that's impressive is that she is competing over the long haul of the game. The contribution just about every touch is very positive for the basketball team."

Junior forward Shana Wheeler came off the bench to score 15 points, and two other Wildcats — junior Kimberly Dietz and sophomore Shalee Lehning — finished in double figures, scoring 13 points and 10 points, respectively. Lehning also had a team-high 11 assists, marking her first double-double of the season.

"When we can get that kind of balance, it gives us a chance to be a better basketball team," Patterson said. "I think that's what these early season games provide us — an opportunity to get some balance and to get players a little more comfortable in the framework of the offense."

The Wildcats took a 26-23 lead into the half, after a late six-point run gave Alcorn State (2-2) some momentum in the closing minutes. But the game didn't remain close for long, as the Wildcats used a 15-3 run early in the second half to build a decisive 41-26 lead.

Sophomore forward Marlies Gipson finished with 15 points in K-State's 81-41 win over Alcorn State. Gipson was named Most Valuable Player of the tournament. She is the first player to garner MVP status since Kendra Wecker won the award in 2003.

"I think this team, in the second half, established that they were going to be more intelligent on the offensive end of the floor," Patterson said. "We began to play a little higher percentage basketball in the second half."

The Wildcats have won three straight games, holding opponents to an average of just 31 points per game during the stretch.

WILDCATS STOMP DEVILETTES

K-State defeated Mississippi Valley State 77-18 in the first round of the Wildcat Classic on Friday night.

The point total for the Devilettes was the fewest points an opponent has ever scored against K-State.

The previous lowest score total was 23 points, by Central Connecticut State on Jan. 2, 2004.

The Wildcats held Mississippi Valley State to just five field goals and 8.6-percent shooting, both records for futility against K-State.

The Devilettes made 5-of-58 shots and missed all 24 three-point attempts.

"Mississippi Valley State obviously had a lot of trouble making shots to-night, but I do feel like we overall did a nice job of contesting it, being in a good, solid, sound defensive position," Patterson said.

Freshman Ashley Sweat scored a career-high 15 points and led all scorers.

The team pulled down a season-high 61 rebounds and recorded a season-high 21 assists.

Gipson and Wheeler each blocked four shots and have recorded at least one block in every game this season.

"Defense is obviously a big part of our game," Wheeler said. "I take a lot of pride in defense, but I love playing defense."

FBC | Florida to meet Ohio State in national championship game

Florida beat Michigan on Sunday in the only game that mattered.

The Gators, who lobbied hard for this victory, were picked to play No. 1 Ohio State for college football's national championship, ending any chance for the Wolverines to get the rematch they so desired and thought they deserved.

Southern California was a step away from the title game if it had beaten UCLA on Saturday. Instead, the second-ranked Trojans were upset 13-9, dropping in the standings and clearing the way for Florida (12-1) or Michigan (11-1).

The Gators leapfrogged idle Michigan by winning the Southeastern Conference championship game 38-28 over Arkansas.

Michigan's consolation prize is a Rose Bowl bid to play USC (10-2), a classic Big 10 vs. Pac-10 match-up of teams left to wonder what could have been.

The championship game is Jan. 8 in Glendale, Ariz.

In other BCS bowls:

■ Big 12 champion Oklahoma will meet unbeaten Boise State in the Fiesta Bowl on Jan. 1.

■ Big East champion Louisville will play ACC champion Wake Forest in the Orange Bowl on Jan. 2.

■ LSU will take Florida's spot in the Sugar Bowl and play Notre Dame on Jan. 3.

Big 12 Conference teams in the bowls:

■ Oklahoma State (6-6) vs. Alabama (6-6) in the PetroSun Independence Bowl.

■ Texas A&M (9-3) vs. California (9-3) in the Pacific Life Holiday Bowl.

■ Missouri (8-4) vs. Oregon State (9-4) in the Brut Sun Bowl.

■ Texas Tech (7-5) vs. Minnesota (6-6) in the Insight Bowl.

■ Texas (9-3) vs. Iowa (6-6) in the Alamo Bowl.

■ Nebraska (9-4) vs. Auburn (10-2) in the AT&T Cotton Bowl.

K-State loses 84-82 heartbreaker to Colorado State

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was as easy as one, two, three.

All Cartier Martin had to do was sink three free throws, and the Wildcats would land an unthinkable comeback victory at Colorado State Saturday.

With K-State trailing 84-82 and one second left, the senior forward was fouled while attempting the game-winning 3-pointer.

He went to the line with a chance to win — or at least tie — the game and shock the 3,894 Ram fans at Moby Arena in Fort Collins, Colo.

Simple enough for last year's Big 12 Conference leader in free throw percentage, right?

Not quite. Martin clanked the first, clanked the second and, trying to miss, banked the third freebie in. A tenth of a second remained, and the Rams got the ball in-bounds to secure the 84-83 victory.

It wouldn't have been such a tough defeat for the Wildcats (4-3) if they hadn't fought so hard to make it that close. Colorado State (5-2) — fueled by a career-high 30 points from guard Cory Lewis — led by as many as 15 points in the second half and was ahead 71-60 with 6:36 left.

However, K-State scored 12 points in the final minute to pull back into the game. Martin led the way with 21 second-half points after going scoreless in the first half, and junior guard Blake Young chipped in with 15 points — all but two coming in the second half.

In all, the Wildcats scored 56 points during the second half, more than doubling their first-half output of 27 points.

The Rams were led by Lewis, who sunk 7-of-8 from three-point range after entering the contest with only four 3-pointers in the first six games. The starters accounted for 79 of the Rams' 84 points, with guard Tyler Smith scoring 19 and forward Jason Smith totaling 15 points.

Lewis hit 7-of-8 free throws down the stretch to keep the Wildcats at a distance, but things got interesting in the final seconds.

Young hit a 3-pointer with one second left to put the score at 84-82. All the Rams had to do was get the ball in-bounds, but the pass sailed over the head of Jason Smith and out of bounds.

That gave K-State the ball under its own basket with one second left, which led to Martin's free throws.

K-State fell to 1-3 on the road and is 0-5 all-time at Fort Collins. In their previous two road games, the Wildcats fell by 24 at New Mexico and by 30 at California.

K-State returns home Tuesday to face Cleveland State at 7 p.m.

More than 200 play poker in After Hours tournament

By Emily Haug
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One K-State student spent his 21st birthday playing poker Friday night.

"I was really excited for a chance to win some prizes," Caleb Frasier, junior in secondary education, said. "Unfortunately, I lost after the first hand."

The After Hours Poker Tournament, sponsored by Union Program Council, was Friday night.

The tournament took place from 7 p.m. to midnight in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

More than 200 students registered for the Texas Hold'em tournament.

"It has really been a success," said Amanda Stanford, junior in psychology and After Hours co-chair. "Everyone who showed up tonight or was on a waiting list was able to play."

Pat Agwu, adviser for After Hours, said the tournament has been put on for the past 3 1/2 years. The tournament was sponsored by UPC but was run by Midwest Entertainment.

The Union Ballroom was set up with 20 tables, and 10 contestants were assigned to each table.

The chips and decks of cards were provided for the contestants. Each table delegated one person as the dealer.

Many contestants took part in the tournament for a chance to show off their poker-playing talents and for the possibility of winning prizes.

Midway through the tournament, nachos were provided to the players.

The tournament was played continuously until there was a final table of 10 players.

Prizes were awarded to the top three winners. The champion won an Xbox 360.

The second-place winner received a digital camera, and the third-place player won a $75 Best Buy gift certificate.

Kevin Quinn, senior in architectural engineering, said he enjoyed the poker tournament.

"It was really a fun time," he said. "I have never done anything like this before. I was depressed that I got out before the nachos were served, though."

If students missed out on the tournament, they will have a second chance to participate when UPC sponsors another tournament in the spring.

Tour retells Christmas story

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A group of eager faces leaned forward to gaze at the sleeping form of a child.

A young couple sat behind the wooden cradle, smiling despite the cold. They softly began singing "Silent Night." The group of people began whispering the words, singing in the middle of a stable.

This scene was one of the climatic moments at the outdoor, interactive nativity program, Bethlehem Revisited.

The 45-minute tour took visitors across the farm of Nancy and Judd Swiharts in Keats, Kan., to tell the story of the birth of Jesus Christ.

Visitors packed a welcome center at Keats Park at the tour's start, sipping hot beverages before facing the cold.

Tour guides led groups through the story of Christmas, starting with the words of prophets centuries before Christ's coming. Groups heard the prophetic words of Moses, David, Isaiah, Micah and Zechariah.

Groups listened to the story of Jesus' birth according to the Bible, from Mary's visit from an angel to his birth in a stable. Groups walked through a crowded marketplace and watched as shepherds heard about Jesus' birth from an angelic choir.

Jessica Shoffner, junior in horticultural therapy, and Amanda Lindahl, junior in bakery sciences, attended Bethlehem Revisited Saturday night. It was their first time.

Shoffner said she heard the experience reminded one of the reason for the holiday.

"I think a lot of Christmas is taken away from Christ's birthday," she said.

Lindahl agreed.

"It's a really fun and good reminder of what Christmas is all about," she said.

The outdoor tour brought the experience to life.

"It's fun and awesome to read about the story," Lindahl said, "but it's neat to see the story played out."

The Swiharts have had the event at their farm since the 1980s. Nancy said the event started small, with family and friends. In about 1993, Nancy said the family had a large group come through, and the event began to grow.

Local churches and Christian groups have become involved with the program, including Grace Baptist Church, Manhattan Christian College and K-State students.

Over three days' time, Nancy said the program has space for 2,000. People go in groups of 20 about every 10 minutes.

This year, narrators have taken more responsibility from guides, keeping narration standard, Nancy said.

To the group providing the program, Bethlehem Revisited is more than a story retold. It's a real-life experience.

"It's real," Nancy said. "It's in the out of doors where you smell all of the smells and touch things, and that all blends into that experience."

Deer season starts amid sleet

By Josh Rouse
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The rifle season for deer got off to a cold start Wednesday. However, icy sleet did not deter hunters from going out and trying to bag a deer on the first day.

"I think that for the first day, with the cold and everything, the deer will be moving a lot," said Ashley Hards, sophomore in park management and conservation. "I think that the number of kills that would happen ... will be increased a lot."

Nathan Dermody, sophomore in construction science and management, said he has been anticipating the season for about two months.

"I am always excited for deer season," he said. "I really start getting excited in September, since bow season is only a couple weeks away. I am always getting ready, from shooting my bow in the spring to scouting in late summer."

Art auction closes AIDS week

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

World AIDS Week ended Saturday night with an art auction in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

The art show, which featured art donated by local artists, raised money for the Regional AIDS Project.

Photographs, pastel drawings, watercolor and several other media were represented in the show.

Lori Wadell, sophomore in biology, attended the auction.

"I think that this is a good way to raise money for AIDS awareness," she said.

The silent auction lasted for an hour. Minimum bids ranged from $20 for some of the smaller works to $85 for a sculpture shaped like a coffee mug.

Anthony Garcia, junior in mass communications, helped a fellow Delta Lambda Phi fraternity member run the event.

"I am really just here to help sell art," he said.

Several attendees gave speeches. Jason Dockins, president of the Queer Straight Alliance, spoke about how AIDS has affected his life.

"I don't have AIDS, but I know several people that do," Dockins said.

There also was a piece of the AIDS blanket on display.

"I really like the AIDS blanket," Wadell said. "I think that it is a great way to remember those lost to AIDS. It just makes me remember how precious life really is."

As the final event in the World AIDS Awareness Week, 27 pieces of artwork by members of the community, students and professors were auctioned off at Artists for AIDS Awareness silent auction.

picking the Wildcats for their games. The Texas Bowl selects last of the Big 12's bowl games.

"Most of the conversation that had been taking place was between the Alamo and Insight," Weiser said. "But it's hard for me to sit here with anything but excitement when we're sitting here with a team that many predicted to finish in last place."

Rutgers finished this year with 10 wins for just the second time in university history. The season also marked the first time the Scarlet Knights beat a Top-15 team in school history when it beat No. 3 Louisville 28-25 on Nov. 9.

The Texas and Insight Bowls will be the only two games televised on the NFL Network. The network is not available on several cable packages.

"The network is growing and thriving," coach Ron Prince said. "It's exciting to be a part of something that's new. I think the real football purist will be involved, and it will draw subscribers and many first time people to the network."

Toy programs meet holiday needs

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Santa is not the only one bringing toys to children this holiday season.

For the last 20 years, needy families have received toys for Christmas thanks to the Toys for Manhattan holiday gift program and the annual toy run put on by ABATE of Kansas, a motorcycle-riding organization.

Both annual programs aim to help families in need.

Toys for Manhattan is a 40-year-old program, created by the community for the community to help underprivileged families during this season.

ABATE's Saturday toy run fundraiser was in the form of a poker game with a $5 per hand entry fee. The bikers, who were given a playing card at each of the five stops on the run, competed for the best hand.

A biscuits and gravy breakfast before the run and a chili feed after both raised additional funds.

"I enjoy participating in the day, because it gives children a Christmas that wouldn't otherwise get one," said Walt Gatsche, commander of the local VFW.

"I see my parents like pioneers almost," E.J. said.

E.J. also is in an interracial relationship. His girlfriend, Audra Gardener, senior in apparel textile marketing, is white.

Audra said friends sometimes tease her about only dating black men.

While her parents seemed to have an issue with her previous relationships with men of a different race, Audra said they have come to accept her choices.

"My family's had a couple of issues before when I was dating other guys," she said. "I had dated a Jamaican guy before."

E.J. said he does not think twice about his relationship with Audra, especially since he is the child of an interracial couple. Despite his comfort in his relationship, E.J. said he sometimes struggles with the idea of his own race and where he is accepted.

"I'm more accepted by the black culture than the white, because I'm of color," he said.

E.J. said he frequently is confused for someone of a different race, but not necessarily black. If he grows a beard, E.J. said people mistake him as Middle Eastern. He's often confused for Hispanic and even Creole.

Although friends and family don't comment much about their different races now, Audra and E.J. said they constantly get double-takes from people. Audra remembered the time she and E.J. were eating at Village Inn, and a middle-aged woman passed them several times, gawking with an open mouth.

But E.J. said that is expected.

"It's going to be the older couples," he said. "That goes with both cultures."

Audra said the looks don't stop with the older generation — she gets them from people of other races.

"I also get looks from black women," she said. "Black women don't like it when you dip into their dating pool."

Audra said she is quick to approach others about their prejudices when someone makes a derogatory comment about another race.

"I can't change the world," she said, "but I can at least change a couple of people's minds."

SLOWLY CHANGING

The country has had a long history of prejudice and discrimination against diversity of race and backgrounds, said Liz Salett, president of the National Multicultural Institute in Washington, D.C. But things are changing for the better as people learn how to change their way of thinking.

The United States has responded to diversity in mixed ways, Salett said. Some groups openly accept the need for change, while others do not want to bother.

"I think there has been a very visible evolution in the last 20 years," Salett said. "I would say now there's a huge change. There's a lot of talk about diversity. There's a lot more recognition, and I think the nation is responding."

Juanita McGowan, director of K-State's American Ethnic Studies, said the United States is seeing more biracial and multi-racial children, but the growing frustration has been racial-identity development and how society wants to categorize children.

"One of the greatest challenges I've seen is helping the child identify what they're going to be called," she said.

Parents are giving their biracial or multiracial children color-blind responses, McGowan said, not preparing children to identify themselves.

In the 2000 census, McGowan said an increasing number of people checked the unidentifiable "Other" box for ethnicity. The category is one of the fastest-growing.

Susan Williams, associate professor of sociology, said younger generations seem more accepting of biracial relationships than older generations.

"However, the question remains, is this a cohort thing, that is, specific to this particular generation, or will young people, too, grow more conservative with age?" she said. "Overall, though, attitudes are very slowly changing, it seems."

People like to feel they belong, Williams said, and sometimes those who choose to marry outside their race are viewed unfavorably by other members of their race.

"Very often, those of a minority group are seen as sell-outs if they marry whites," she said, "and sometimes whites who marry other races are then denigrated, by some people who may feel threatened, as marrying down. I don't see the big deal myself. After all, we're back to talking about something as insignificant, in my opinion, as skin color."

It's in the bag

Are you wondering what to wear to make an entrance at those holiday parties you're going to attend? Or don't know what to buy for your fashionable friends?

Not to worry. There are lots of trends this winter that show a little holiday cheer — without being dressed in red and green from head to toe.

Women:

Trend: Active wear — for the active mom. Buy her something fashionable for running errands on Saturday morning.

Where: JC Penney's New England Patriots Jersey, $39.99.

This women's pink NFL player jersey packs a tough feminine punch so she won't be stuck on the sidelines. Screen-print graphics; team name on front, team logo on sleeves; player number on front, back and shoulders. Washable; nylon. Imported.

Mom's gift:

Trend: Active wear — for the active mom. Buy her something fashionable for running errands on Saturday morning.

Where: JC Penney's New England Patriots Jersey, $39.99.

This women's pink NFL player jersey packs a tough feminine punch so she won't be stuck on the sidelines. Screen-print graphics; team name on front, team logo on sleeves; player number on front, back and shoulders. Washable; nylon. Imported.

Female friend's gift:

Trend: Satin is in. Remember to buy her something trendy. If she's not the trendy type, then buy her something classic that will work into her wardrobe.

Where: Zotchs

Outfit 1 — Light ivory 3/4-sleeved satin collared shirt, $39, with thick black belt to accessorize and black skinny jeans, $59.

Outfit 2 — Black satin red tube gathered dress, $59.

Where: Dillards

Mea Mea Kimono blouse, $34. Black and red print. Cotton/polyester. Imported.

Baby's gift:

Trend: Cute, purple pride.

K-State onesie, $27.

Perfect for the new addition to the K-State family.

Men:

According to the Associated Press, "Way back in 2005, the skull and crossbones seemed like a lighthearted way to infuse classy items — with a little edge." Skulls are in for men's holiday wear. At least fashionable men like movie star Nicholas Cage and even hip-hop stars like Juelz Santana like the trend. Also men's cords can add the wintry look to any sweater. Polo shirts, sport coats and velvet blazers put some cheer in a wardrobe. Accents like dark red ties, scarves, undershirt and button-down shirts add flair.

Dad's gift:

Trend: Lounge wear — buy him something to help him be more comfortable while lazing around the house on the weekends.

Where: Sears, $60.

Comfortable but still sophisticated, he won't mind lounging in this sleek, terry jacquard robe. The tie-robe has a soft, plush fabric ideal for wearing after a shower with its absorbent material. The tie belt provides superior fit and comfort. Machine washable; 100 percent cotton. Imported.

Male friend's gift:

Trend: Comfortable and fleece — buy him something trendy but comfy.

Where: American Eagle

Option 1 — Blizzard Trapper, $29.50.

Built to withstand the elements, designed with rockin' style. This trapper features a warm, furry interior and waterproof, wind-resistant exterior. Also includes long ear flaps with Eagle embroidery detail on it.

Option 2 — Eagle Red Issue Fleece, $49.50.

Well worn. Full-zip fleece features all-over abrasions for a lived-in look. Thermal-lined drawstring hood, front pockets, ribbed cuffs and hem. The front "AE" applique gives off a cool 3D effect.

Holiday singleness can benefit women

The holidays can create a lot of stress.

If you're anything like me, you have more than one family to visit and buy presents for. And single women like me have to re-visit my least favorite conversation of the year: the one in which people inquire about your life — more specifically, your love life.

I'm the baby of my rather large family. Everyone else is married, has children and spends their lives in the suburbs until the Banana Republic mothership comes to take them away. I am content with being the opinionated family oddball who remains steadfastly single (and around the holidays, steadfastly in the liquor).

This, my last column of the semester, is my gift to the single woman this holiday season. If you're the type of lady who has a gay boyfriend on speed dial for special events this season, this column is for you.

There are many benefits for the single woman during the holidays that aren't highlighted nearly enough. Gift buying, for example, is much less exhaustive. I love that the only people I have to worry about are my parents. They know all too well how broke I am and still love and cherish the gingerbread house I made out of popsicle sticks 15 years ago.

You also don't have to drag anyone else along with you. I hate introducing boys to my family. I love my relatives, but they are crazy rednecks with firearms readily available. They call me by my first and middle name (because that's what Oklahomans do). And they love to recall intimate details of my past every time I come home. Not having to share those intimate details with a boyfriend is a real blessing. Merry Christmas to me.

However, not having a boyfriend also forces you to face the aforementioned horrible "Are you seeing anyone?" discussion. Which in my family generally means, "Did you find someone rich who's willing to marry you and take care of you so we don't have to?"

The answer for me is "No," and has been for quite some time. No, I don't have a boyfriend. No, I don't need a boyfriend. I am enough. And I am complete just the way I am. I choose to be single, just like I choose to not listen to people who make marriage seem like the only possible pinnacle a life can have.

So I urge my single friends to face these questions with all the integrity they can muster. And if some crazy, drunk aunt rolls her eyes and says to you, "Oh, well you say that now, but just wait until you're older," I suggest that, in the spirit of Christmas, you follow your heart and say, "I'm 22 years old. Leave me the hell alone."

God bless the single girl, every single one.

Lohan attends AA meetings; mom OKs therapy

By Erin Carlson
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Lindsay Lohan has been attending Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, her publicist said Friday.

"She started attending some, and I think it's a positive thing," Leslie Sloane told The Associated Press. "My biggest fear is who's the big idiot to out which (chapter) she goes to."

ACTRESS

She said Lohan, 20, made the decision on her own to attend meetings, although Sloane added: "And, by the way, she's not saying ... she'll stop drinking tomorrow."

"It's a place to go and feel safe," she said. "No one judges her, and it's going to be a slow process. But, to me, the fact that she's seeing that there's something not right makes her smarter than the next person."

In an interview Friday with E! Entertainment Television's Ryan Seacrest, Lohan's mother, Dina, echoed Sloane's comments.

"That is true ... It's a positive thing," she said.

The New York Post first reported sightings of Lohan at an AA meeting earlier this week. The actress, who's now filming "The Best Time of Our Lives," recurrently makes that paper's gossipy Page Six and other celebrity columns for her hard-partying ways.

Sloane said she thinks the press was unfair to Lohan by ridiculing a statement the actress wrote after last week's death of Robert Altman, who directed her in "A Prairie Home Companion."

A sad Lohan wrote the rambling letter "on the fly" on her Blackberry, Sloane said.

The letter, in which Lohan signs off with "BE ADEQUITE," has been criticized by a number of media observers for its grammatical errors and misspellings, among other things — including exploiting Altman's death for her own publicity purposes.

Patt Morrison, a columnist for the Los Angeles Times, derided it on The Huffington Post Web site as "alarmingly incoherent" and said Altman might find it "comedic."

"I want everyone to leave her the hell alone," Sloane said. "I'm so bored of this with her. No matter what she does, it's never good enough for everybody."

But remember, just because you've been good or bad, you can always redeem (or screw up) your ranking on the jolly old man's list in the remaining 19 days until he visits children around the world.

TUESDAY 1876: Hundreds die in Brooklyn theater fire

A fire at the Brooklyn Theater in New York kills nearly 300 people and injures hundreds more on Dec. 5, 1876. Some victims perished from a combination of burns and smoke inhalation; others were trampled to death in the panic that ensued. The play "The Two Orphans" was showing. The theater was built five years earlier and all 900 seats were filled. Sometime near the start of the performance, a gas light ignited some extra scenery stored in the fly space behind the stage. It wasn't until midway through the play that stagehands noticed the quickly spreading flames. Unfortunately, there were no fire hoses or water buckets.

WEDNESDAY 1884: Washington Monument finished

On Dec. 6, 1884, in Washington, D.C., workers place a 9-inch aluminum pyramid atop a tower of white marble, completing the construction of an impressive monument to the city's namesake and the nation's first president, George Washington.

THURSDAY U.S. Cotton Candy Day

Four people — Thomas Patton, Josef Delarose Lascaux, John C. Wharton and William Morrison — all have been named as the inventors of cotton candy.

Wharton and Morrison received a patent for the cotton candy machine in 1899. They created the first electric cotton candy machine to melt and spin sugar through tiny holes using centrifugal force. After the two candy makers from Tennessee received the patent, Wharton and Morrison took the invention to the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904.

Today, cotton candy is a great treat to enjoy at a circus, amusement park or fair. Even though its beginning can be debated, it has become a top summertime candy.

FRIDAY 1980: John Lennon killed at apartment

Singer John Lennon is shot and killed by Mark David Chapman outside his apartment building in New York City. After committing the murder, Chapman waited calmly outside, reading a copy of "The Catcher in the Rye."

Chapman was a troubled individual who was obsessed with Holden Caulfield. He thought Lennon was a phony and decided to plan his murder. Chapman purchased a gun in Hawaii and then traveled to New York. Unable to buy bullets in New York due to strict laws, Chapman flew to Atlanta and purchased hollow-nosed rounds to bring back.

Experiencing Manhattan

Discovery Center museum to teach local history, draw visitors

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new attraction in the works is expected to bring 60,000 to 100,000 visitors to Manhattan annually.

The Flint Hills Discovery Center, considered to be the cornerstone project of the city's downtown redevelopment initiative, received $41 million in funding via sales tax and revenue bonds from the state.

The goal of the center is to educate the public on the ecology, culture and history of the Flint Hills.

Its subject matter would include the Kansa Indians, the formation of the city and the beginnings of the university. Planners also expect the center would house traveling exhibits, like a Smithsonian exhibit called "The Last Stand."

"It will celebrate the Flint Hills," said Karen Hibbard, director of the Manhattan Convention and Visitor's Bureau. "It's a huge undertaking, but for the community, it's going to be a great attraction and an educational piece."

The Discovery Center will be more than a traditional museum. The plan might include special features like an aquarium with native animals or elevators with screens that show prairie fires and feature heat or other special effects.

"Visitors today want to experience," Hibbard said. "They have been entertained. Now people want the authentic experience. To be a part of a prairie burn. To do hunting and fishing. To see what life is like — that's what the visitor is looking for."

Hibbard said the added tourism from the Discovery Center, which will be at the corner of what is now Colorado Street and Third Street, would mean a need for more hotel rooms, restaurants and businesses.

The STAR bond funding means city officials have a green light to continue planning for the project.

"This was critical state financing," assistant city manager Jason Hilgers said. "It allows us to move forward with a plan that has been in the works for a couple of years now."

Hilgers said the project will require $11 million for construction and $5 million to $6 million for exhibits and furnishings.

He said the city could break ground on the project in as little as two years.

"We're probably looking at a year to design, a year and a half to design exhibits," he said.

The plans for the center include an exterior meant to resemble the rolling Flint Hills. The area will be heavily landscaped with native plants, and a waterfall from the second to the first level will simulate a creek.

Before the project can move forward, it must be approved by the City Commission, Hilgers said. Concept and feasibility studies are still needed, too.

"This is the culmination of several years of visioning," he said.

Memorial to take place Wednesday

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There will be a memorial service Wednesday for a K-State student who died Nov. 30.

Mary Dobbs, doctoral student in geography, died in her sleep of natural causes. Dobbs was 44 years old.

The funeral service will be 2 p.m. Wednesday at the Bryant Funeral Home in Great Bend, Kan.

Dobbs was an instructor of geography at Emporia State University. She would have finished her doctoral degree at K-State next spring.

She is survived by her three children, Zachary, Rica and Thomas; her mother, Louise Bird, Great Bend; and her father, Carl Dobbs, Virginia.

Brownback moves toward White House bid

By Sam Hananel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — After taking the first step in a presidential bid on Monday, Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., said he would start a 10-state tour with a traditional stop in Iowa.

Brownback established an exploratory committee that will allow him to travel the country and raise money while gauging support.

Brownback, 50, says his deep faith in God guides his opposition to abortion, gay marriage and embryonic stem-cell research. He pledged to make "issues of life," fiscal restraint and tax reform key components of his campaign.

Fraternity dedicates site of memorial

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men of Alpha Phi Alpha celebrated the fraternity's 100th anniversary Monday by dedicating ground for a bust of Martin Luther King Jr.

The bust will be on the east side of Ahearn Field House and will be unveiled on Jan. 19, 2007. It is important to the fraternity as well as to the K-State campus, said Brandon Clark, multicultural coordinator for the K-State Alumni Association local agency and member of Alpha Phi Alpha.

"The bust that will be placed here is really significant to Kansas State," Clark said. "Dr. King spoke at Ahearn in 1968, and it was the last college campus he spoke at before he was assassinated. We could think of no better way to honor him and honor his legacy than to put his likeness on our campus."

When the bust is unveiled in January, the adjacent street on campus will be renamed Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Boulevard.

"This is truly an appropriate way to recognize a man that changed the world," Clark said.

King spoke at Ahearn in early 1968, shortly before he was assassinated on April 4, 1968, in Memphis, Tenn.

As a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, King was honored along with other alumni during a libation ceremony on the day of the fraternity's centennial celebration.

Lunchtime festival allows cultures to demonstrate holiday traditions

The K-State Union Courtyard was transformed into a multicultural cafe and theater Monday afternoon for the Festival of Holidays.

The monthly Festival of Nations typically features just one culture, but the Festival of Holidays featured the holiday traditions of many cultures, said Shea Olsen, graduate adviser for the Union Program Council's multicultural committee, the event sponsor.

"It allows us to showcase our cultures and give a lunchtime program as well," Olsen said.

Students enjoyed free food and watched performances from noon to 1 p.m.

Performers included belly dancers, Yosakoi and Alpha Phi Alpha.

The belly dancers performed, and then the Yosakoi dance team performed two dances.

"This is our second time performing for the K-State Student Union festival," Seiji Ikeda, Yosakoi dance team coach, said.

After Yosakoi, Alpha Phi Alpha performed a step-dancing routine.

"Step-dancing has been a part of our traditions since around the 1960s," Brandon Clark, Alpha Phi Alpha adviser, said.

Stepping is a tradition among African-American fraternities, with origins in Africa, Clark said.

Deisy Corredor, graduate student in biological engineering, said she thought the participation for the event was less than normal, but the holiday celebration was a good idea.

Juan Salazar, graduate student in chemical engineering, said he enjoyed the festival.

"It's good to have traditions from around the world in this place," Salazar said.

As the final performance of the Festival of Holidays, Jonathan Scott, freshman in business administration pre-professional, dances with Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity. The men of Alpha Phi Alpha performed a step dance routine in keeping with their organization's traditions.

City honors renovation, preservation of train depot

By Jesse Sachdeva
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

During the City Commission meeting tonight, the community will recognize the completion of a project nearly eight years in the making.

A part of the city since 1866, The Manhattan Union Pacific Depot had sat empty since its last train rolled out in 1984. After the City of Manhattan took over ownership of the building in 1990, the Manhattan/Riley County Preservation Alliance began campaigning to preserve the depot as a historical landmark.

It wasn't until 1998, when architecture firm of Bruce McMillan Architects began the depot's reconstruction, that the project began to take shape.

The depot reopened in a public ceremony on June 3. McMillan Architects caught the attention of the Kansas Chapter of the American Institute of Architecture. The project won the 2006 Honor Award for Renovation/Preservation.

"The project was broken into three phases over the years. The award honors the completed effort," Bruce McMillan, chief architect, said. "But this ceremony with the commission isn't just for us. It's a recognition of a wide common group effort by the community."

The depot's long history recently was recounted as part of associate professor of libraries Tony Crawford's Keepsakes series on the K-State Libraries Web site. Among the depot's highlights was a 1903 visit from President Theodore Roosevelt as part of his "Whistle Stop" campaign across the United States. Roosevelt spoke to the gathered crowd from the back of the train's caboose.

After beginning restoration in 2001, the Manhattan Union Pacific Depot was rededicated on June 3. The depot is now used for conferences, weddings, meetings and parties.

After an overly warm welcome by the K-State band, Roosevelt commanded the director to "Stop that infernal band!" as his speech was limited to 15 minutes, and he didn't want to waste any time. As a final message to the students of the then-Kansas State Agricultural College, Roosevelt said, "I believe in play, and I believe in work. When you play, play hard, and when you work, do not play at all."

Crawford said he hopes the series reminds people the depot isn't just "that old place behind the mall," and that it has deep ties to K-State and the community.

Though it won't see trains rolling in any time soon, the depot is now used as a multi-purpose facility, able to host exhibits, conferences, parties and even weddings.

Linda Glasgow, member of the Manhattan/Riley County Preservation Alliance, said the alliance still is involved with the depot. Glasgow also works as an archivist for the Riley County Historical Museum.

"The alliance just received a grant from the Caroline Pine foundation to provide some new enhancements to the depot," she said. "New blinds and (audio/visual) equipment are some of the new things. Hopefully they'll help the depot to become a highly sought venue."

The City Commission meeting honoring the depot project is at 7 tonight.

Families shouldn't panic yet — hotels are still available for graduation weekend in Manhattan.

Many hotels said it is business as usual, even with the upcoming graduation ceremonies. Hotel managers said they are used to the influx of people during the football season, so graduation weekend isn't much different.

"During this busy season we check the rooms a little more thoroughly to make sure everything is just right," said Sherry Sharp, front desk worker for Best Western of Manhattan.

Some hotels still have rooms available as of Monday afternoon.

Impending oblivion

Bans on home-cooked meals, demands to make nice with 'Axis of Evil' signal end of times

I fully plan to spend the encroaching holidays lying in a bulwark of ammo, frozen pizzas, bottom-shelf whiskey and dirty magazines in preparation for the end of the world — which, consulting Hogg's magic eight ball of divine guidance, will be right after my last final.

Evil events lurk on the horizon. The insane frolic at our impending doom. Oil prices rise, Congress reconvenes, milk goes sour before the given expiration date — portents of further horrors to come.

As a start, the government in Fairfax, Va., has started to lay the kibosh on shelters serving home-cooked meals in onerous attempts to enforce health codes. Given the voracity with which most people consume home-cooked meals (sometimes two or three times a day), we're left to wonder what in hell we are worried about.

We are all, doubtlessly, awash in the fact that grandmother's pantry is the place where beakers of poison and bacteria glow malevolently next to Bacos and bags of pasta, patiently waiting for the church potluck. Having known the homeless and seen the banquet lying in the dumpster for the enterprising to discover, one wonders how bureaucrats prepare food if they consider the garbage buffet preferable to mom's PB and J sandwiches.

If this foul portent is an unconvincing argument that the fury of the damned is nigh a week away, I present Keith Ellison, a Minnesota Democrat and our first Muslim Congressman, and the ensuing uproar after he said he would prefer to take his oath on the Quran rather than the standard Bible at his swearing-in.

To this we pose: do we desire Muslims swearing oaths on a Bible, a book that means, roughly, jack to a practitioner of Islam? Given a litany of choices for swearings-in, I'd rather utter sacred mantras over something of personal importance — I do not suppose I will feel some great revulsion welling up inside if I abscond with sacred promises solemnly murmured over a copy of "Moby Dick."

Onward we go — chubby pundits issue forth joyful hope, then anxious clamoring and finally bloody-fanged demands that we coalesce with Iran and Syria in some manner of sacrificial offerings to the sulfurous gods of the Middle East. That we now actively converse with nations once considered parts of the "Axis of Evil" or "beyond the Axis of Evil" (Episode V: The Axis Strikes Back) illustrates the cavernous depths of despair we now explore.

If our time was spent deliberating with those who wish us success in the region, we might find some reason for the ongoing festivities. Both Iran and Syria openly have wished us dismal fortunes in the region — seeking their advice for success is much like sending the playbook to the opposing team's head coach for suggestions. I do not spend my precious free moments conversing with Holocaust deniers and those wishing annihilation upon entire nations. If our elected leaders are penciling them onto their calendars, perhaps we have our priorities misaligned.

We are in no danger of finding ourselves in absence of things to herald our impending oblivion. Indeed, entire forests of paper shudder in terror that such a list someday will manifest itself.

I can but steel myself for the thunderous approach of doomsday, and in the interim between the holiday shopping of today and the fiery, fiery Armageddon of next Wednesday, construct my mighty bastion of love and firearms.

Schools should focus on academics, not racial quotas

Should schools choose what students can attend on the basis of race, or should children attend the schools closest to them?

White parents from the Jefferson County Public School district in Louisville, Ky., told the U.S. Supreme Court on Monday that their children were denied their first school preference solely because of the color of their skin.

Today the court will decide whether the school district, by engineering racial diversity in its schools, acted in a constitutional manner.

Does this scenario ring a bell? The infamous core issue of Brown v. Board of Education has resurfaced, more than 50 years after the Supreme Court ruled that separate schools inherently are unequal.

According to the Associated Press, children were denied entrance to the schools of their choice, at least initially, for no reason other than the color of their skin, a policy backed by the Bush administration.

Blacks make up 34 percent of the student body in the Jefferson County Public School system, which wants to limit the black student population of each school to no less than 15 percent and no more than 50 percent.

This is a nice effort by the Jefferson County Public School system, but racial diversity cannot be created mathematically. Just because you throw these children in school together does not mean they'll learn about diversity and how to interact with other cultures.

Maybe what's wrong is our society. Races tend to flock together in communities and neighborhoods. It's nearly inevitable, then, that they will end up at the same schools.

Here's an idea: maybe schools should spend more money focusing on academic excellence instead of how many children of each race attend the schools.

According to the AP, the district argues this program "significantly advances the goal of teaching students how to participate in a democracy that has formed a single society out of many diverse people."

SHEILA ELLIS

Many schools won't admit they use racial quotas when assigning children to schools, but it does happen.

I can attest to this personally. As a product of the USD 501 school district in Topeka, I have experienced racial quotas.

My high school was almost 60 percent minorities. So when girls tried out for the cheerleading squad, certain talented minority girls did not make it simply because the school could not have an all-black squad.

As much as schools want to say things are equal between minority schools and majority schools, it just isn't true.

Hopefully the Supreme Court will make the right decision today, or when we have children we might have to drop them off at schools across town to meet racial quotas.

Holiday season presents chance to help less fortunate, those without family

The holiday season is here. While most of us are trudging through the final two weeks of school so we can go home to be with our families, we also should think of those who don't have relatives with whom to celebrate.

The holidays can be a depressing time of year for many. Those who have lost loved ones might see the holidays as a sad time because those loved ones are not here to celebrate.

Also, many elderly people who live alone don't have family to visit during the holidays.

The winter season is a generally depressing season. It's usually cold outside, and everything that was green in the spring and summer is dead and brittle in the winter.

If you are spending the holidays with family, remember those around you who might be less fortunate.

Invite your elderly neighbor over for a holiday dinner, present him or her with a gift basket, or donate food to a local charity that provides for those in need. As you walk out of Wal-Mart loaded with Christmas presents, add your change to the red buckets positioned outside of the exits and offer a friendly hello to the volunteer ringing the bell.

While the holidays are meant to be spent with family and friends, remember those who don't have anyone with whom to share the holidays.

Get in the holiday spirit and help those who need it. Your holiday season will be more satisfying if you do.

ACLU defends Christians, other religions

Editor,

I read with shock and awe the editorial demonizing the ACLU as "hating Christians" and being anti-Christmas. As a card-carrying member of that honorable organization, I must respond to correct this absurd misrepresentation and the damaging tactics it embraces.

Just for the record, I count some 37 cases in recent years that the ACLU has defended Christians and Christian organizations for freedom of religious opinion. And this doesn't include dozens of cases where it's defended minority religious freedoms, which are much more needed when we see that almost half of Americans polled would submit Muslims to the kinds of identification requirements (as tattoos, armbands) the Nazis required of Jews. Don't take my word; check their Web site. As to the joke about wanting to "communicate" with the ACLU, that's precisely what typically is lacking here — (there is) no dialogue at all, not even with K-Staters.

As far as awarding this material large headlines and a big cartoon of a smirking Jesus, I suggest if the Collegian must be a training ground for tabloid sensationalists instead of journalists of integrity, at least get your controversies right (the legitimate issue of just how far church and state must be separated), check a few facts, and consider when you might be miseducating our community.

Confederate flag memorializes proud history of South; leaders served out of love for state

Editor,

I am a Tennessean with Confederate ancestry writing in response to Zachary Eckels article about the Confederate flag. Now, apart from the lack of understanding of Southern culture and heritage, Eckels also connects the Confederacy to the Nazis. Yet I wonder, has he ever learned about the leaders of the Confederacy?

Let's start with Robert E. Lee, who displayed the most tactically brilliant field command of the time. He also was offered command of the Union armies first and chose to lead the Confederate armies, not out of hatred toward blacks, but out of love for his state. How about another great Confederate, Stonewall Jackson, whom General Lee referred to as his "right arm"?

This man held no hatred or revulsion toward slaves but was a strong, Christian man with tremendous battlefield skills and deep devotion.

The list goes on with honorable men who led and fought for the Confederacy, and for Eckels to compare them to those responsible for the Holocaust is of the utmost shame.

How dare he besmirch the good name of these men and the flag for which they stood? Eckels knows nothing of Southern pride and the history from which we came. If he did, he would know we Southerners see the flag and think not of bigotry and racism but of the great men who once marched under that flag.

Yet because others are too closed-minded to see the pride of our history, we should accommodate them and renounce the flag under which our forebears marched? I will not. I will continue to hold fast to my heritage and the symbols thereof, regardless of what Eckels continues to write.

Comic strip pushes limit in mocking student; motivation behind humor appears juvenile

Editor,

I am very upset about the comic strip in the Collegian on Nov. 29. Jess Boatwright went too far when she wrote that. I don't care that it didn't say anything specifically hurtful about the so-called "Scooter girl."

The Collegian was rude, and I lost all my respect, what little I had left, when that was published.

What is Scooter girl hurting? Why is she being made fun of?

She's not doing anything different than gay people walking around holding hands, but you don't see comic strips mocking them.

I don't know what the motivation was behind that comic strip, but it definitely did not stimulate humor. It's time for Collegian staff members to stop acting like they're in high school.

Compromise, flexibility alleviate season's stress

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When students head home for the holidays next week, many will experience a solid month of family togetherness.

That can mean great comfort or great anxiety, depending on the circumstances.

Charlotte Shoup Olsen, K-State Research and Extension family systems specialist, said striving for the image of a picture-perfect holiday is a large source of stress.

Compromise and flexibility are key in keeping stress at bay, she said.

"During the holidays especially, it's unlikely that everything will go as planned," Olsen said in a release. "That, in itself, provides a teachable moment, as children model parents' behavior in smoothing the way for a pleasant family gathering."

Rather than focusing on the tasks that need to be completed, families can focus on enjoying one another's company.

"Time together is precious," Olsen said. "Children grow quickly, and family structure evolves as parents and grandparents age."

If togetherness gets to be too much, though, people can benefit from taking a few minutes to be alone, which alleviates the buildup of stress.

The onset of the holiday season also can be painful for those who have lost a loved one or find themselves alone. When they feel isolated, people can seek support through friends, community groups or religious services.

They also could volunteer their time by visiting a nursing home resident during the holidays.

More than 50 percent of nursing home residents have no living close relative, which could be related to the estimate that 60 percent of nursing home residents have no visitors, according to a survey by the American Association of Retired People.

For people who have lost a loved one, a good way to cope with sadness is to realize that it's normal to grieve and cry, according to a guide by the Mayo Clinic.

Homecare and Hospice offers support sessions for those coping with grief. Counselors provide support, tips and coping skills. Anyone can attend one of the sessions, which will be 1:30-3:30 p.m. today or 5-6:30 p.m. Dec. 12.

For more information, call (785) 537-0688.

To reduce stress during the holidays:

- Share the work. Try a potluck meal or eat out.
 - Celebrate traditions, but don't let them rule. Be open to new activities and ideas that could develop into future traditions.
 - Blended family? Blend traditions, including favorite menu items, by inviting everyone to participate, even if it isn't the way you might have done it previously.
 - Let go of some of the extras. If your mother or grandmother used to make six different kinds of pies, choose one or two recipes — pumpkin or apple, for example — and go with it.
 - Give people the benefit of the doubt. If Uncle Jed likes to talk politics but also likes to play board games, suggest an early game to help maintain the holiday mood.
- Source: Charlotte Shoup Olsen, K-State Research and Extension family systems specialist.

If you're alone on the holidays:

- Get out and go somewhere. Find places to stimulate and amuse you. Museums, festivals or streets decorated for the holidays might recharge you.
 - Take on a home project. Fix up that guest room, do some indoor planting or, weather permitting, do some touch-ups outside your home.
 - Rediscover an old creative talent. Have you been telling yourself you'd start painting again or get back to the guitar? Now's your chance.
 - Treat yourself to a personal spa. Read a mystery novel by the fireplace. Take a candlelight bubble bath.

Huggins brings exposure, revenue, but needs time to implement changes

That the thought has even arose that maybe we should start to question coach Bob Huggins this early in his K-State career is ridiculous. Claiming to know more about how to coach a basketball team than Huggins is like claiming to know more about foreign affairs than President George W. Bush.

OK, so maybe that analogy doesn't work, but you get the point.

Huggins has won 20 or more games 20 times in his 24 seasons as a coach. That's a lot of 20s. How many times has K-State won 20 or more games since the 1988-89 season? Twice.

Forget that Huggins has brought an immeasurable amount of exposure and money to this program. Forget he already pulled the best recruiting class in the nation for next season according to almost everyone.

Let's focus on this year's team, because that's what people, including my colleague here, seem to be so concerned about.

The Wildcats aren't off to a hot start.

They are just 1-3 on the road, two of those losses being blow-outs at New Mexico and California. Maybe a lot of fans would've preferred a loss like the one at Colorado State Saturday, an 84-83 heartbreaker that made me question if it was really former coach Jim Wooldridge on the sideline wearing a Huggins costume.

Wooldridge's teams were famous for not having what it took to win tough games on the road.

That's what Huggins is trying to change.

The increase in revenue and the recruiting are aspects upon which Huggins can have an immediate effect. And he has. Reforming the mentality of this squad, however, will take time.

It's amazing that people are questioning Huggins this early, immediately after watching football coach Ron Prince go through the exact same thing. We just witnessed the patience it takes to watch the first season under a new coach. Did we learn anything?

At least the doubting of Prince was a bit more justified. He hadn't coached a game before arriving at K-State.

Huggins, on the other hand, has coached a game or two in his career. He arrived with a 567-199 career record.

The man is a winner. He has proven that through years and years of hard work, but apparently seven games of struggles is enough to throw all that away.

A lot of people are complaining about the Wildcats' lack of offense. I'll admit — it does seem the team has no plan on offense. It consists of four people standing around the outside not setting screens and Jason Bennett or Luis Colon or whoever "posting up" inside and never getting the ball.

But here's the thing. Huggins wants to get his team right defensively before worrying about offense. Why? Because defensive consistency is far more important in tough leagues like the Big 12 Conference.

If losing meaningless games in November is the price Huggins has to pay to get this team where he wants, he'll do it. He's sending a message to his players.

He will get them where he wants them to be.

There are still four months left. My suggestion: let's be patient and let the man work his magic.

NICK DUNN

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

I go to the Peters Recreation Complex every once in a while and play pickup basketball games with a bunch of people I've never played with before.

It's fun. We have a good time, but it's also extremely sloppy. The two teams have little to no chemistry and have a hard time getting into any offensive rhythm.

When I play with people I've played with before, we know how the others operate on the court, and thus, we have more consistency during the game.

The defense is better because everyone has more of an understanding of where their teammates will be. The passes are more accurate because the players have a better idea of where teammates are on the court. The teams make more shots because the players know where the others should stand on offense to have the best chance to score.

Most people who know anything about basketball would agree that some of the best teams become great because they play together on a consistent basis.

This brings me to the state of the K-State men's basketball team.

K-State has a 4-3 record this season and has won only one of its four road games. One of the team's three road losses includes an 84-83 loss last Saturday to Colorado State.

The biggest problem with this team is consistency and chemistry, or lack thereof. The Wildcats have a hard time getting into an offensive rhythm and usually end up throwing the ball around the perimeter until the shot clock runs down.

This leads to one of the players throwing up a contested three-point shot that is rebounded by the opposing team because none of the Wildcats are anywhere near the basket.

Huggins is not doing a good job coaching this team so far, and a perfect example of this was the Coppin State game on Nov. 25. Three minutes into the game, point guard Blake Young stole the ball and went down the court for a layup. He missed, and the Eagles grabbed the rebound because the other four Wildcat starters hadn't attempted to make it past halfcourt.

Huggins benched those four players due to a lack of effort, and the starters didn't play together again until there were about seven minutes left in the game.

Huggins is trying to make his players understand the amount of work involved in playing championship basketball, but the way he is doing it is wrong.

He should have called a timeout, yelled at them and sent them back onto the floor together. They could have played through their mistakes and continued to learn how the others operate on the court.

The starting five will not become a better unit if they are always benched for poor play. They have to be allowed to play through their mistakes and learn from them. Only then will this team begin to start showing signs of improvement.

Hopefully the addition of Bill Walker on Dec. 17 will give this team another dimension offensively.

If Walker comes in and is as effective as K-State fans hope, Huggins is going to be known as a genius because of how quickly he turned this program around.

But if Walker doesn't contribute like he's supposed to and K-State continues to struggle, the Big 12 Conference season is going to be a long one this year, and everyone is going to begin questioning the coaching methods of Huggins.

I just thought I'd start a little earlier than everybody else.

K-State faces Cleveland State after 3rd road loss

Men's basketball coach Bob Huggins talks to senior forward Cartier Martin just before Martin returns to the game during the second half of the game against William & Mary Nov. 11 at Bramlage Coliseum.

Bob Huggins probably is ready for the winter break. The extra time off from academics to focus on basketball could do his team some good.

K-State (4-3) has lost three of its last four games, with its last win coming against Coppin State, 68-57, on Nov. 25. The Wildcats lost their last three road games by a combined score of 240-185.

"We just got to continue to work at being more consistent, and that's just top to bottom," Huggins said. "I'm kind of looking forward to the break. I think we'll get better."

While the Wildcats' road woes have been piling up, they have been 3-0 at home. K-State will be back at Bramlage Coliseum at 7 tonight when it faces Cleveland State (5-4).

Junior forward J'Nathan Bullock is the Vikings' leading scorer, averaging about 15 points a game.

Cleveland State has won four of its last five games, with the lone loss coming against No. 15 Butler, 70-45, on Dec. 2.

Part of the reason for K-State's slow start has been a lack of production from some of its veteran players.

Junior forward David Hoskins, who was the Wildcats' second-leading scorer last year, scored just six points in K-State's last two losses.

"I think the thing to do is continue starting Dave," Huggins said. "Whether that continues or not, I don't know."

K-State's leading scorer from last season, senior forward Cartier Martin, is once again the Wildcats' No. 1 offensive option, but he has missed in clutch situations. Martin scored a team-high 21 points during K-State's 84-83 loss to Colorado State last Saturday but missed two of three free throws with a second remaining in the game.

"We've asked him to do a whole lot more," Huggins said. "We've probably asked him to do more than he had in the past."

BKW | Wildcats open on road against Louisiana Tech tonight

After breezing to a pair of easy wins in taking the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic championship over the weekend, the K-State women's basketball team will play its first road game of the season at 7 tonight.

The Wildcats (6-1) will play Louisiana Tech (2-5) and try to extend its winning streak to four games. In its last meeting against the Lady Techsters — last season at Bramlage Coliseum — the Wildcats won 77-66. It was just the first win in seven tries against Louisiana Tech, a team that finished 26-5 last season and advanced to the NCAA Tournament.

But after losing two starters from last year's team, the Lady Techsters have stumbled out of the gate to open its season. However, they still present some problems for the Wildcats, as Ty Moore (13.1 points per game) and Shan Moore (13.0 ppg) — no relation — bring double-digit scoring averages into the contest.

So far this season, the Wildcats have been paced by sophomore forward Marlies Gipson.

Gipson is averaging 13.9 points and 8.9 rebounds per game, and has been equally impressive defensively. Gipson has collected 15 blocks in seven games and has helped her team hold opponents to an average of just 33 points per game in the last three games.

The Wildcats received eight votes in this week's Associated Press Top-25 poll.

CBK | Rutgers coach Schiano won't leave to coach Miami

PISCATAWAY, N.J. — Rutgers coach Greg Schiano will stay with the school he led to national prominence this season, rather than pursue taking over the troubled Miami program.

Schiano, Miami's defensive coordinator in 1999 and 2000, said he told Hurricanes athletic director Paul Dee on Monday that he was not a candidate to become their head coach.

Miami coach Larry Coker was fired after going 6-6 in the regular season.

Schiano has orchestrated No. 16 Rutgers' rise from one of the nation's lowliest programs in the past six seasons. At 10-2 (5-2 Big East), the Scarlet Knights are heading to a Texas Bowl match-up against K-State.

Rutgers narrowly missed the Bowl Championship Series by losing Saturday night in triple overtime at West Virginia. Last year, Schiano led Rutgers to its first winning season (7-5) since 1992 and its first bowl berth since 1978.

CBK | Stanford coach Harris fired after 6-17 record in last 2 years

STANFORD, Calif. — Walt Harris was fired Monday as Stanford's football coach, two days after finishing the worst season in more than four decades at the school.

Walt Harris' 6-17 record led Stanford to dismiss the coach two years into a five-year contract.

Athletic director Bob Bowlsby announced the decision after a morning meeting with Harris. The Cardinals (1-11) finished their season with a 26-17 loss to rival California in the Big Game on Saturday.

Harris had a 6-17 record in the first two years of his five-year contract. Bowlsby said he'd like to have a search for a new coach completed in two weeks.

Web site links recyclers for trade of used items

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The saying "One man's trash is another man's treasure" has been given new meaning thanks to Freecycle.org, a recycling Web site.

If a person has something that won't be destroyed in a landfill or that others could use, the item can be posted on a local Freecycle Web page. It is free to join.

Need a wheelbarrow? Simply type it into a search engine, and the site will return all of the wheelbarrows listed within a 100-mile radius. The main database on Freecycle's Web site can be searched for nationwide results.

People can start their own local groups. If an area does not contain a population that can support a group, that group might be combined with a group from a nearby city.

There are more than 40 Freecycle groups in Kansas, but none in Riley County.

Since its May 2003, beginning in Tucson, Ariz., the program has become popular in states like Michigan and Illinois; both states have more than 100 groups. However, the idea has yet to catch on in other states like Kentucky, where there is only one group.

Globally, there are more than 3,800 groups and 2,800,000 members.

Annie Baker, a Freecycle moderator in Junction City, said college students can benefit from the program.

"Most times when a student is moving, there are some things that the student cannot move and is forced to throw away," she said.

"That is where they can use Freecycle. All they need to do is post what they have on the site, pick who they want to give their item to, and then arrange a pick-up time."

As a moderator, Baker said her duties include overseeing exchanges and ensuring her local site is running well.

According to the Freecycle Web site, Deron Beal, who was working for a non-profit company at the time, developed the idea to establish an e-mail network of items being thrown away that people could use.

He and 30 friends started the recycling service, which operates in more than 50 countries. Volunteers run each of the local sites for the non-profit organization.

Becky Bennie, junior in elementary education, said she would use the site if she knew more about it.

"I would give stuff away in hope that the favor would be returned if I moved to a new city where I needed something," she said.

Prison dog-training program aids community, Ellsworth inmates

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The empty nest syndrome a mother feels when her children leave home is the same way Jeremy Shane, inmate at Ellsworth Correctional Facility, and many other inmates feel about their dogs.

Ellsworth Correctional Facility inmates are involved in a prison dog program in conjunction with the non-profit organization Canine Assistance Rehabilitation Education and Services. The partnership, which has been strong for eight years, trains dogs that are affordable and available to people with special needs. There are 14 inmates who are currently training dogs.

After the dogs are trained, the inmate, the dog and the person who will receive the dog meet at a graduation ceremony.

"It is hard sometimes to let the dogs go after you've spent so much time with them and worked so hard to train them, then they just leave," Shane said.

The dog lives with the inmates in their cell, said Robert Speer, head of the prison dog program at Ellsworth.

"The inmates have the time to spend to bond and teach them. Most professional trainers are trying to train 20 dogs at the same time," Speer said.

Sarah Holbert, chief executive officer of CARES, said the dogs are a bargain for recipients, and they benefit the community.

When the people in need receive dogs, they pay a $500 reimbursement fee that funds everything that goes with the dog, including specialized equipment, a microchip to help locate the dog and a specialized harness, Holbert said.

"These types of dogs are being sold for more than $20,000 per dog," she said.

After the dogs are trained and the inmates give the dogs away in the graduation ceremony, CARES customizes the dog to the individual recipient's particular need, Holbert said.

CARES trains dogs to assist people who are handicapped, have developmental, hearing or emotional problems, seizures or diabetes health issues.

The staff and inmates at Ellsworth are terrific to work with, and they make the program run smoothly, Holbert said.

Shane said the program helps decrease violence in the facility.

"It's easy to get in trouble in here, and this program helps me stay out of trouble, because I don't want to lose my dog," he said.

To participate, prisoners have to have good behavior, follow all of the prison rules, and be willing to work with the dog 24 hours a day, seven days a week, Speer said.

"For most of these inmates, this is the first time that they are doing something positive and something the inmates and their families can be proud about," he said.

The program has been proven to be beneficial to both the prison inmates and the facility staff, Speer said. The dogs' presence makes staff and inmates happier and more talkative.

"When the staff and inmates are smiling, that is a big plus. It makes life a little more humane and teaches the inmates how to care without hurting," he said.

The inmates take pride in training these dogs, Speer said, because most prison jobs are not something in which someone would take much pride.

"Unless you spend time here, it would be hard to understand how bored or starved for something real these people are," he said.

Through this program, the inmates have done a lot to give back to the community, not only in the United States, but internationally.

Montana, a chocolate lab, was trained by prisoners at Ellsworth and sent to Peru to help a 400-person orphanage, Speer said.

"In Peru, most of the dogs are untrained, wild and could hurt you. It was very unusual for them to have Montana," Speer said.

CARES members visit the prison and teach inmates the basics of training a service dog. Some inmates are advanced enough that they are allowed to teach their peers on their own.

Not only does the prison dog program ease possible hostilities between inmates and staff, but also it improves the prisoners' mental and physical health.

Shane said his quality of life in the facility has improved since he started this program.

"It has given me a comfort zone," he said. "I have been in different institutions that did not have this, and it helps me pass the time and be happy, because when the dog is happy, so am I."

Dana Britton, associate professor in sociology, said depression is linked to physical health. The prison dog program forces people to be active.

Britton said 99 percent of inmates are going to leave prison and the prison dog program helps mold them into better members of society when they get out.

"This program gives the inmates a chance to be molded into the people that you want to live next door to," Britton said.

Although the program has been proven to be beneficial to the inmates and staff, there are a few negative effects the program could have.

When the inmates have the dogs, they stand out and are more likely to be isolated from the other inmates.

"One negative is that the inmates can't hide in-crowd. Everyone is looking at you," Speer said.

It also is a big responsibility for the inmates. They must pick up after the dog and wash the dog, and they are confined to a small cell with a dog and other inmates.

Warden Sam Cline said the facility he came from did not offer a canine program.

The dogs' presence is relieving in a jail environment, Cline said.

"These animals give the inmates an outlet of affection that they that hadn't had before," he said.

The next class of dogs to be distributed to people through CARES will have almost 650 dogs.

Holbert said CARES, a non-profit organization, sometimes struggles to make ends meet.

"We do fundraising to pay for food and medical equipment for the inmates and people in need," Holbert said.

She said people are now donating to help national crisis victims and not funding as local organizations as much. However, CARES still finds a way to keep providing the dogs to the community.

ancestor worship," said Deron Davis, member of Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity and non-degree student in biology. "On this day, our centennial, we are inviting our ancestors, our founders, to be with us."

The ceremony started as fraternity members made a circle around the hallowed ground. The members all were dressed in black suits with gold ties to honor their fraternity colors. The chaplain recited a prayer, and the ceremony began.

"We are here to honor you and to show that your legacy is alive and well," said Davis, who led the libation ceremony. "We pour libation to you."

After three minutes of silence, the university bells played the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity hymn. After the hymn closed, members repeated the hymn in song.

Water was poured on the site of the bust to ritually cleanse the area. Davis said the ceremony was in honor not only of past Alphas, but also of all ancestors of the African-American community.

"This not only encompasses Alpha," Davis said. "This encompasses the entire African-American struggle in the diaspora. As we come to this moment, we remember Alpha was a benchmark in recognizing the achievements of the African-American community."

The day of celebration for Alpha Phi Alpha did not end with the libation ceremony. The members performed a step show in the K-State Student Union, followed by a visit to the Boys and Girls Clubs of Manhattan, one of the Alphas' philanthropic endeavors.

"I'm so honored, and I feel lucky to be alive on this day to celebrate 100 years of Alpha," said Abdul Yahaya, junior in civil engineering and fraternity president. "Having the opportunity to be with my brothers on this historic day is amazing, and I have this opportunity thanks to K-State."

Japanese Yosakoi Dance Club includes members of different ethnicities

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In 2004, Seiji Ikeda returned to K-State after spending three years in Japan, where, among other things, he learned to dance a style known as Yosakoi.

But Ikeda's dancing didn't stop once he returned to Manhattan. In fact, Ikeda is more involved with the dance style now than during his days in Japan.

He is the creator and coach of the Japanese Yosakoi Dance Club at K-State.

Ikeda, graduate student in art, started the Yosakoi club by combining his skills as a coach, which he attained as coach of the K-State men's rowing team in 1997-2000, and his acquired knowledge of Yosakoi.

By doing so, Ikeda created one of the few groups in the United States that perform this style of dance.

Ikeda began the Yosakoi club to create an activity that could include both the Japanese Student Association and the Japanese Appreciation Alliance.

Since its creation in 2005, the Yosakoi club has grown from 30 to 45 members and has performed at a number of on- and off-campus events including multicultural and greek functions, fundraisers and this year's All-University Homecoming parade.

On Monday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Courtyard, Ikeda's dance group performed to students in the Festival of Nations, which showcased different types of dance, costume and other elements of cultures from around the world.

The Yosakoi club has performed outside of the Manhattan area, including in the Kansas City area and Omaha, Neb.

Soon the club hopes to perform at Yosakoi festivals in Hawaii and Washington, D.C., and to compete in Japan this summer.

The dance style of Yosakoi, which began in the Japanese city of Kochi in 1954, is highly energetic and combines traditional Japanese dance movements with modern music.

Though Yosakoi originated in Japan and focuses on tradition, being of Japanese ethnicity is not a requirement to join the group at K-State.

"I would say that only about half of our group's members are of Japanese origin," Ikeda said. "I think this contributes in a positive way to the attitude of the group. We try to teach embracing other cultures in Yosakoi."

One non-Japanese dance member is Ryan Cloyd. Cloyd said he had never danced before, but that didn't discourage him from joining the group.

"Yosakoi is as much a social thing as it is a dance thing," Cloyd said. "There are some people who join the group just to be with friends, and there are also some that join for the exercise."

Along with including members of all nationalities and those with no previous dance experience, the Yosakoi club also accepts all ages. Club members range from 6- to 50-years-old.

For those interested in joining the Yosakoi club, the group practices 7-9 p.m. Tuesdays and Fridays in the Union Courtyard or the International Student Center.

You also can find out more about the group at www.ksuyosakoi.com.

Yosakoi members perform as one of three dance presentations at the Festival of Holidays, a part of the Festival of Nations put on by the Union Program Council. The club has 45 members and is recruiting new dancers for next semester.

Farfetched novel doesn't develop plot, characters

"Schrödinger's Ball"

Grade: C-

Book review by Ericka Brunson

Four friends, one of whom might be dead, are wandering Harvard Square.

But is anyone really dead unless observed to be by someone else?

"Schrödinger's Ball," a novel by Adam Felber, aims for a special blend of quantum theory and satirical wit, but falls short of a scientific explanation.

Felber uses the infamous quantum theory of superposition principle proposed by physicist Erwin Schrödinger to explain why Johnny, who accidentally shot himself, is still walking around drinking with his friends. Or why the president of Montana declares war on the rest of the country and then flees when things get out of control. Or why Schrödinger, who died in 1961, is still alive spouting his theories and hypotheses on how our perceptions are the determiners of our fates.

But who can concentrate on these things when Schrödinger's cat is constantly making a racket in the house but is nowhere to be found?

Felber has fresh, distinct ideas that would have made for about four enticing books, but when crammed together in one, his ideas are too short-lived to have the chance to develop into something good.

All of Felber's chapters end up sounding redundant and leave you wondering if you're just starting the book or finally finishing it.

Felber's outrageous characters and equally strange scenarios will shock you, scare you and often bore you with their repetition.

For every small, insignificant character like Lester the rat, to over the top characters like Deb, who has perfected the half-hour orgasm, Felber heaves on one excessive plot change after another.

Maybe Felber can take the Harvard Bag lady, another one of his batty characters who is rewriting the history of the world, and have her rewrite his book.

Employees resort to hiding tattoos, piercings to succeed at thier jobs

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chris Tassin, tattoo artist and body piercer for Fine Line Tattoo in Manhattan, has been giving tattoos and piercings for 10 years and has seen people of all ages and professions walk through the door, including military personnel, doctors and K-State teachers.

Recently, Tassin said, many of the people coming in to get tattoos have been middle-aged and older women, but no certain age, gender or profession can be names as the tattoo or body-piercing group.

"There's really not a type of person," she said.

But the undeniable truth is people are getting tattoos and piercings they can hide for work or interviews.

"Most people are trying to keep them under their clothing for their jobs," Tassin said.

Kerri Day Keller, director of Career and Employment Services, said students need to show they care about their appearance and put thought into how they present themselves.

"What you look like isn't solely what counts," she said.

Keller said physical attributes do seem to affect employers overall.

"If you come in with disheveled hair and dirty shoes, that probably won't make the most positive impression," she said.

Susan Williams, professor of sociology, said some businesses might prefer employees without excess piercings and tattoos, either from personal preference or for the overall appearance of staff.

"Some may have a personal problem, but I suspect that most who do voice an objection think that it will hurt their bottom line — that customers won't come there if the staff sports tattoos," she said. "Perhaps what the majority do not consider is that the tattoo trend has changed tremendously in the past 10 to 15 years."

While visible tattoos and body piercings might affect some employers, Keller said other organizations and businesses do not view these as an issue when hiring.

For people seeking jobs in traditional settings like banks or accounting firms, Keller said tattoos and piercings will have more effect on employers than more informal settings like non-profit organizations or more creative environments.

"If you are interviewing with a more conservative industry, there are just some things you have to do to present yourself and get your skills and knowledge noticed and establish some credibility," she said. "Later on in the job,

Appleby found guilty in murder of KSU student

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OLATHE, Kan. — A former swimming pool maintenance worker was convicted Tuesday of killing a college student in 2002 at the northeast Kansas pool where she held a summer job.

Jurors in Johnson County District Court deliberated less than three hours before finding 31-year-old Benjamin Appleby guilty of capital murder and attempted rape. Appleby's lawyers had rested their case earlier Tuesday without calling any witnesses.

Ali Kemp, 19, was found beaten and strangled on June 18, 2002, in the pump room of a Leawood community pool where she was working in the summer after her freshman year at K-State.

Appleby, who had a pool maintenance business at the time, was arrested in November 2004 in Bantam, Conn., where he was living with his fiancée under an alias. Authorities tracked him there after receiving an anonymous tip.

Prosecutors were not seeking the death penalty, meaning the maximum sentence Appleby faces is life in prison with no chance of parole for 50 years.

Conservatory closed for restoration

By Dustin Sanborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The historic conservatory at K-State University Gardens has been closed for restoration.

The two-year project for the building will cost $450,000, said Tom Warner, head of the horticulture and forestry department.

Warner said the conservatory is being repaired so it will be safe for students to work in.

"The conservatory has been a great learning lab for students, but the structure has weakened to the point where safety is a concern," Warner said.

The project is being funded by private donors, he said.

"Right now we are in the silent phase of fundraising," Warner said. "A formal statement (of what is going on) will be made in March."

To restore the conservatory, people from the department of horticulture and forestry had to move plants, some of which have been in the conservatory since it opened in 1909.

The smaller plants are being moved to the greenhouse at Throckmorton Hall, and others will be adopted by community members.

The next phase will to sand and reglaze the metal beams and put new glass into the conservatory, Warner said.

After the restoration is complete, the conservatory will be reopened.

"If all goes as planned, the University Conservatory will reopen on or right around its 100th birthday," Warner said.

Car crashes into store front; business remains open

By Austin Apple
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A woman hit a parked car and then crashed through Carpet Plus, 300 N. Third St., Monday morning after losing control of her car, said Lt. Mike Quintanar with the Riley County Police Department.

Velta Kramer, 79, was driving a white 1993 Subaru Impreza at the time of the accident, Quintanar said.

Laura Douglas, an employee of Carpet Plus, said she was present at the time of the accident and offered her take on what happened.

"Kramer lost control of her car when her gas pedal got stuck," Douglas said.

Kramer then hit an electrical post and continued on until her vehicle came to rest in the front of the store, Douglas said.

"The driver damaged a display case and the front door," Quintanar said.

Although Carpet Plus sustained a large amount of damage, it still is open, Douglas said.

"The windows are boarded up and some things are still broken, but we have cleaned up, and our store is still functional," Douglas said.

Freshman leads K-State

K-State's Jason Bennett brings down a rebound Tuesday evening in the Wildcats 93-60 win over Cleveland State.

The seven-foot-three, 260-pound Jason Bennett lumbered out to the perimeter and deflected a shot by Cleveland State guard Joe Davis. He managed to grab the ball off the tip but stepped out of bounds with less than seven minutes to play in the first half.

The Vikings barely had time to inbound the ball before Bennett blocked another shot 10 seconds later. Bennett finished the half with five blocks, which helped K-State (5-3) beat Cleveland State 93-60 Tuesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

"I've been trying to beat the most blocks in a game record," Bennett said. "Now I'm trying to get the most blocks for a freshman."

Commissioners consider shelter renovations

By Natasha Meyers
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A grant in January 2007 might be passed to rezone the Manhattan Emergency Shelter located at the northwest corner of South Fourth and Yuma streets. The announcement was made at the city commission meeting Tuesday evening at City Hall.

The two-phase project will renovate the Emergency Shelter Building and the Transitional Housing Building. The project also will include placing signs that contain address numerals, real estate signs and holiday decorations. Lighting, landscaping, screening and a drainage system also will be addressed.

Assistant director for Planning Eric Cattell said because only 15 percent of the residents living in the shelter have automobiles, parking spaces for that percentage of people will be added.

According to the city commission agenda, approximately 29 percent of the site is open space that will be owned and maintained by the applicants. Under one of the alternative options, a playground for children will also be included.

The Emergency Shelter Building has sleeping rooms for families, men and women and has bathrooms for guests. In the Transitional Housing Building there is a kitchen and laundry facility, a sitting area and three bedrooms, although in the new plan there are going to be 24 bedrooms, allowing eight families or 32 people to live there at once.

Mandy Chapman Semple, executive director of the program, described why the buildings' locations are of such importance to the clients.

"Downtown offers a lot of services that are viable," Chapman Semple said. "We are going to be close to all of the temporary services, which is what our clients use for resources."

If the grant is proposed in January, Chapman Semple said she is hoping to be back in the shelter by summer 2008, although if the program isn't awarded the money, the move-in date may be pushed back. Chapman Semple said she will get the money, regardless of obstacles.

"If this doesn't happen, then some form of amendment will have to happen," Eric Cattell, assistant director for planning, said.

Another development in Manhattan that was brought up during the meeting is the Meadowlark Hills Residential Planned Unit Development, a facility for the elderly, which will be constructed in four phases.

The first phase, which will start in the spring of 2007, will be building eleven new cottages, although the embellishments won't be visible to people passing by.

"We want to establish the development and meet the needs of our older population," Leon Brown, landscape architect, said.

Before next week's City Commission meeting, a holiday reception open to the public will be offered at 5:30 p.m. in the City Commission Room at City Hall.

Guitarist Jason Hamlin, left, and DJ Lee, members of Scratchtrack, perform in the Union Courtyard on Tuesday in the K-State Student Union. The duo tour the country performing.

Band stops at Student Union for free concert

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students walking through the K-State Student Union Tuesday were greeted by the music of Scratchtrack, a duo that tours the country performing.

When the show began, only a few people were sitting around the stage. As the show wore on, more people arrived to listen to the music.

Kory Pederson, senior in pre-counseling, made sure to get an early seat.

"My friends told me about them and I checked them out," Pederson said as he waited for the show to begin.

After the first song, DJ Lee took the microphone and talked with the crowd. Lee explained the band's history as he prompted the crowd to cheer for the band.

Other audience members walked by at just the right time. Preston Sperry, graduate student in business administration, said he was walking toward the door when he heard Hamilton's slide guitar and decided to sit down.

"I like the way they mix their styles," Sperry said as the band began to play their next song. "I think I'll check them out."

According to the band's Web site, Scratchtrack started as a trio in 2000 in Jackson, Tenn. Band members said they formed the band primarily as a release from the pressures of school, but they decided to write and perform more often after they played a college variety show.

The band then moved to Martha's Vineyard and began touring and writing full-time.

During the performance, guitarist Jason Hamlin kept a slide on his pinky for the first two songs and played four-finger chords, wrapping his thumb around the neck of his instrument.

The other member of the band, DJ Lee, beat-boxed over Hamlin's guitar. For one track, DJ Lee live-looped some of his vocal beats and added hip-hop-style lyrics over the track.

Gamers' remorse

Hype surrounding video-gaming systems inspires violence among customers waiting in line

Video gaming technology is astounding. The graphics, types of games available and overall picture provide for a variety of enjoyable opportunities.

Along with this new technology, though, comes the need to get the best as soon as possible. Two new technologically superior – and of course expensive – gaming systems were released last month, producing enormous lines outside of Best Buys and Wal-Marts all over the country.

Customers braved the cold and skipped class and work just to get the opportunity to buy one of the Nintendo Wii or Playstation 3 systems of limited supply.

What is interesting, though, is that many of the people in line planned to sell the systems on eBay for as much as $2,000. The lure of a massive profit made several potential customers a little restless. Robbery attempts and other acts of violence and inappropriate behavior occurred.

Even former vice presidential candidate John Edwards was accused by a Wal-Mart employee of trying to cut in line for an opportunity to buy a Playstation 3.

In Connecticut, one person was shot while two robbers tried to rob a line of customers waiting for the new system. A group of students from North Carolina teamed up to accost another student that had waited three hours in line just to buy the systems and took them while he was unloading them. One of the students was killed last Friday after the cops went to his apartment to look for the missing systems.

According to CNN, the student reportedly opened the door holding some type of device. The police did not risk it being a gun and fatally shot him. This might have been a little severe, but that is a separate issue.

What is certain is this type of merchandise can cause violence. A few gaming systems are inconsequential compared to a human life.

Stampedes, arrests, injuries and death: these things usually are associated with events like gang violence or the Running of the Bulls, not buying a video game. This is ridiculous.

Video games are fun, but they are not worth the sacrifice of my grades, job or health. I would rather just wait a few months to buy the system when it might be a little less expensive and definitely less dangerous.

Our society has become far too impatient. People will jump at any opportunity to get rich quickly, without even examining the consequences.

I could blame the makers of the video games for hyping the systems so much and only releasing a small number of systems at a time.

Customers have been waiting for a long time and will do anything to get one of those bundles of virtual enjoyment.

But I blame the customers for this apparent slip of logic and reality. These are just games. Unless these people plan to turn the video game connoisseur into a profitable career, I do not see the point.

Games can be a nice break from reality and offer moments of entertainment, but for most, the games will not get them a job in the real world.

Classes, jobs, family and friends are more important than being one of the first to buy a new gaming system.

Patience is a virtue no matter how nice the graphics are.

President needs to take study group's recommendations seriously

Today is the day.

Finally, after all the speculation and anticipation, this day has arrived. No, I'm not talking about the new episode of "The Biggest Loser" on NBC. Today, the Iraq Study Group's report of the situation in Iraq is expected.

The group, also known as the Baker-Hamilton Commission, was formed in March and is supposed to give a bipartisan assessment of the conflict in Iraq, which, as we all know, is not a civil war.

Or at least that's what we're told.

Reports were leaked in the New York Times that the group might recommend the withdrawal of some U.S. forces in Iraq. But, according to Newsweek's cover story, the head of the commission has said that is untrue.

James Baker III, the former secretary of state and leader of the group that bears his name, denied speculation they will say a withdrawal of troops is the solution. However, according to Newsweek, the commission most likely will recommend American forces take more of a training role so the Iraqis finally can learn how to take control of their own country.

OWEN KENNEDY

This last week, President Bush denounced the idea of a graceful withdrawal from Iraq, saying he saw no realism in the idea. But Baker apparently sees some possibility in this.

What Bush thinks of when he hears withdrawal is all troops out of Iraq by, say, this Thursday at 9 a.m.

He has refused to consider bringing troops home in phases, which has been proposed by the Democratic leadership in Congress.

Baker's proposal, in the spirit of bipartisanship, is a bit of a hybrid between the two: troops aren't bailing out of Iraq completely, but they won't be on the front lines in the civil war anymore.

Oops, I meant terrorist- and faith-based skirmish.

We only can hope Bush will listen to the commission. They certainly have bought him some valuable time. Anytime a reporter, lawmaker, voter or dirty liberal asks him about Iraq, he simply says he is waiting on Baker's report.

Well, the time has come, and he can either pay heed to what the commission recommends or continue to talk of victory and getting the job done for a few more months, without giving any hint of how to fix the problem, whatever it may be.

If he decides the group's ideas aren't the best way forward, we will get to enjoy a few more months of speeches about the America-hating cut and runners. If Bush doesn't like the group's conclusions, he'll tell us Defense Secretary nominee Bob Gates will need time to figure out what to do in Iraq.

Yay, more wasting time.

Since Baker's recommendations are non-binding, little action will be taken in the short run. The media probably will give too much attention to this, and pundits will argue about whether the commission is proposing defeat or if they're covering Bush's backside.

Hopefully, their proposals are realistic, and to the liking, to some extent, of those in power.

If not, the commission will fade into oblivion, and we will return to telling ourselves that the mission was accomplished long ago.

Just ask the U.S.S. Abraham Lincoln.

TO THE POINT

Tattoos shouldn't be a big deal to employers

People get tattoos for many reasons – to remember loved ones, celebrate past events or sometimes just for fun.

For many, the sound of a tattoo gun and sensation of a needle entering their skin is as addicting as any known drug.

Through strict regulations, the tattoo industry has become safer than in recent history. All arguments associating tattoos with the lower aspects of our society are now null and void.

However, tattoos still are frowned upon in the United States, and getting one in an easily visible place might hinder you in the future.

This must be considered before inking your skin.

If you want that high-paying job, you'll probably have to sacrifice getting tattoos on any area that might not seem professional.

While you might not agree with the logic, businesses still maintain the right to insist their employees appear clean cut.

But, in a free society, this should not happen.

Whether you oppose upon religious objections or just the complete stupidity of it, you don't have the right to judge anyone who makes the decision to get one.

The idea that the best person for a job is going to be overlooked simply because they've changed the color of their skin is idiotic.

We can be proud we're free to do what we want with our bodies. If the tattoo is important enough, we're allowed to get it anywhere a tattoo artist is willing to go.

In the end, the choice is yours.

Outdated sources, misplaced arguments fail to prove recycling a waste of time, money

Editor,

In his Nov. 16 editorial "Bunch of Garbage," Chuck Armstrong claims he proves recycling neither saves money nor protects the environment, but he falls far short of that goal.

First, given the wealth of research and statistics available on solid waste management and recycling, it's amazing how the author mentioned only the most dated and inappropriate sources.

Just a few examples are citing only one recycling company operating in the red as proof that recycling has no economic foundation, a quote from a nearly 20-year-old EPA pamphlet, and a description of landfill technology from a person with a doctorate in physiology.

Armstrong looks only at the simplest of economics — raw materials are cheaper — without considering other costs, such as long-term sustainability, air quality and a host of others.

Armstrong could have mentioned recycling in the United States prevents the release of more than 30 million tons of carbon into the air per year. He could have considered the many communities in the United States that no longer have space for landfills. But he chose to stick with arguments like it making environmental sense to waste paper because it means more trees will be planted.

Armstrong certainly is entitled to his opinion on recycling, but he shouldn't feel he's proven recycling has no benefit.

Richard's outburst should not be taken lightly; attempt at humor reveals deep, racial prejudices

Editor,

I commend Jonas Hogg for expressing his opinion about the comments made by Michael Richards.

However, in doing so, Hogg has exposed his lack of ethnic competency. He seems to view this as an incident in which minor insults led to hurt feelings. I argue that this is more than hurt feelings.

This is bigger than Richards and his audience members. This is a public issue of racism.

The outburst Richards made showed deep-seated anger and hostility toward African Americans in particular. He used the N-word in a derogatory manner and attempted to pass it off as humor.

The acceptance of such an outright racist outburst should not be an option. The comments offended not only the African Americans in the audience but others who value ethnic and cultural diversity.

Ask yourself: do you want to live in a world in which people are categorized, excluded, oppressed and judged on the basis of race? I don't, and I feel that we cannot move toward racial and cultural harmony if we continue to pretend racism does not exist or is somehow OK. If we pass off the seriousness of this incident, we will in a sense condone such ignorant behavior.

I urge you, as students and faculty capable of making the change, to do so.

Do not let this be so quickly swept under the rug. Keep talking.

Express your opinions. Through dialogue we can address racism and end it.

Shelter forced to turn away some during holiday season; help from community needed

Editor,

An important community issue that requires the support of Manhattan residents and students alike has come to my attention.

The Manhattan Emergency Shelter has far reached its limits for receiving and caring for the community's homeless and has been having to turn away homeless families and individuals.

The most realistic and efficient alternative is to build a new shelter.

The current shelter is working to raise a total of more than $1.2 million to build a new facility that will house 52 people, more than twice as many individuals as the current facility.

It also will offer more storage for supplies and new opportunities for social service agents to care for and enable residents to gain foundations for support.

Recent efforts have been fruitful, and after graciously receiving the Carolyn Pine Grant and a Community Block Grant from the Kansas Department of Commerce, the shelter has raised more than $800,000.

It is important for residents and students to see the need to take action against this community problem and support the shelter through financial and volunteer efforts.

Donations also are requested, as personal care items always are in need.

With more than $300,000 still to be raised, please, for the sake of the community and all its members it, contact the Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. at (785) 537-3113 and see how you can support the building of the new shelter facility.

Students urged to stay safe over holiday season

Wildcats,

One down, one to go. Thanks to each and every Wildcat for an incredible fall semester. I feel honored to ride the wave of success we have had this fall. With Thanksgiving just past and the holiday season approaching, we should reflect on our blessings, for they truly have been many. Another Marshall scholar awarded, an upset victory over Texas in football, and a visit by the Secretary of Defense just days after a momentous political turnover are just a few.

We opened the Biosecurity Research Institute and named it in honor of Sen. Pat Roberts, and we've created what might become a new tradition here at K-State — Lighting Up the Little Apple: A K-State Holiday. And don't forget the ground-breaking at K-State-Salina, where students look forward to the construction of a truly remarkable Student Life Center.

There is but one wish I have for everyone over the break: stay safe. I hope you all enjoy the rest, and I look forward to continuing yet another banner year as Wildcats.

Students use college years as time of religious exploration

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many students are on a quest for religion, according to a recent study — and some students at K-State said they are no different.

The study, released Oct. 6 by the Higher Education Research Institute, found 74 percent of students are having conversations with their friends in an attempt to determine the best way religion for them, according to the HERI Web site. More than 112,230 students participated in the survey.

Mark Cordon, junior in psychology, said he is on a spiritual quest, but not in an attempt to find himself.

"I believe that you are always on a journey, and God is found in that journey," he said.

He said he cares more about his relationship with God than being involved with mainstream religion.

"I think that the most important thing is that you are true to yourself. As long as you are, then you will find a way eventually," he said.

While some said they are seeking God, others said they are skeptical of the church.

"I went to church for years, and then I had a negative experience," said Terry Sawdy, sophomore in elementary education. "When I turned to the church for help, I was judged and looked down upon. That really just turned me off to the church."

Even so, Sawdy said she is still religious.

Cordon said he is still working on his thoughts about life after death. He said he believes it is up to the person about life after death.

"I can't believe that it is black and white," he said.

K-State goes inside early, often in win

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One specific play in K-State's 93-60 victory over Cleveland State Tuesday reflected a change in mentality of the entire team.

The Wildcats already had the game sealed, ahead 53-27 early in the second half. Senior forward Cartier

Martin exploded along the left baseline, jumped in the air, absorbed the contact from a Viking defender and put in an acrobatic layup as the whistle blew.

A blocking foul was called on Cleveland State — Martin to the line for a chance at a three-point play.

"That was all skill," Martin joked after the game. "Coach (Bob Huggins) wanted us to be aggressive around the basket. If it had been a charge, then hey, I'd still be going to the basket hard trying to get fouled."

Martin missed the following free throw, but the assertiveness required to take it to the hole that strong was something sorely missing in the team's previous two losses at California and Colorado State.

The Wildcats jumped on the Vikings early, sinking nine shots before Cleveland State could make a field goal. The good shooting continued all game, and K-State finished shooting a season-high 61.5 percent from the field. The previous high was a 50.8-percent performance against Tennessee Tech.

The main reason for the great shooting boiled down to a simple basketball law — it's easier to make shots if you're closer to the basket. And it's easier to get shots close to the basket if you're aggressive about driving it into the paint.

"That's the way we're supposed to play," Huggins said. "We have not been very assertive. We attacked the basket. We threw it in close. We went at the basket rather than fading away."

The Wildcats outscored Colorado State 46-26 in the paint and hit 16 of 24 shots in the first half on the way to a comfortable 50-23 advantage at the break. More importantly, the Wildcats shot only three 3-pointers and drew 17 fouls on the Vikings. All the fouls led to 16-of-21 free-throw shooting.

"We got a bunch of layups and foul shots," Huggins said. "If you think about it, you can miss every shot, but if you rebound them and put them in, you're shooting 50 percent."

In its two previous losses, K-State combined to shoot 45 3-pointers, compared to only 22 free throws. The Wildcats finished Tuesday's contest with 11 3-pointers and 35 free throws.

"They were a small team," freshman center Jason Bennett said. "We thought if we'd take it to the basket, get more inside shots, then they'd crowd in and we could ditch it."

By comparison, an obviously overmatched Cleveland State squad settled for deep, contested shots throughout the contest. The Vikings finished 3-of-22 from 3-point range and missed 16 of their first 17 shots from long distance.

"We didn't do anything," Viking forward Patrick Tatham said. "We went away from our offense to starting at half court. That's not what we do. We went away from everything we do."

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN
K-State's Cartier Martin looks to drive around Cleveland State's Kevin Francis Tuesday evening during the Wildcats 93-60 win over the Vikings.

CLEVELAND STATE Wildcats hold Vikings leading scorer Bullock to 8 points

With 22 blocks this season, Bennett is already close to breaking the freshman record of 24 held by Shawn Rhodes set in 1996. Bennett leads the Big 12 Conference in blocks and has swatted more shots than Nebraska's entire team, which has 16 blocks on the season.

At more than seven feet tall, Bennett is expected to block shots. However, his career-high 11 points came as a bit of a surprise.

"I don't know if he'll get 11 every night, but he ought to be able to score if he rebounds," coach Bob Huggins said.

K-State's other freshman big man, Luis Colon, also finished with a career high in points with nine. Colon was back in action after serving a one-game suspension after being ejected from a game for throwing a punch against California on Nov. 29.

Senior forward Cartier Martin led the Wildcats in scoring with 21 points on 6-of-8 shooting from the field.

After scoring a combined six points in his previous two games, junior forward David Hoskins was second, scoring 17.

K-State led at halftime 50-23. The 50 points were the most the Wildcats scored in a first half all year.

A big reason for all the early offense was the Wildcats' willingness to drive to the basket and draw contact. Cleveland State committed 17 first-half fouls, which K-State used to convert 16-of-21 free throws.

"We just wanted to be aggressive and attack the rim," Hoskins said.

The Vikings' leading scorer, sophomore forward J'Nathan Bullock, was limited to only three, first-half points. Bullock finished with eight points, which is six less than his average.

Huggins credited Bennett's defensive presence for Bullock's off night.

"He got swallowed up by size," Huggins said. "It's hard to score on Jason when he's in."

For the first time all season the Wildcats shot better than 60 percent from the field. K-State used several layups and dunks to inflate that number.

"That's the way we're supposed to play," Huggins said. "We haven't been very assertive. We went from shooting 30 threes a game to only three in the first half."

With the win, Huggins is now 6-5 all-time against Cleveland State. The Vikings beat Huggins five times while he was a coach at Akron between 1984 and 1989.

Women's basketball team escapes with rare road win

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Thomas Assembly Center has been a house of horrors for visiting teams through the years.

It almost was for the K-State women's basketball team Tuesday.

The Wildcats (7-1) nearly blew a 20-point first-half lead, narrowly escaping Ruston, La., with a 64-61 win over Louisiana Tech on Tuesday night. It was just the 23rd time in 24 years that the Lady Techsters lost a home game. K-State became the third unranked team ever to defeat Louisiana Tech (2-6) on its home floor.

Senior guard Claire Coggins led the way for the Wildcats with 17 points — all of them coming in the first half — and had five assists and four steals. Junior guard Kimberly Dietz scored 15 points, and sophomore guard Shalee Lehning added 10 points, six assists and a team-high nine rebounds.

Clinging to a 62-61 lead with seven seconds left, Coggins deflected a Louisiana Tech inbound pass intended for senior Amber Metoyer. Dietz came away with the ball and was immediately fouled.

The Wildcats were not yet in the bonus, and four seconds later sophomore forward Marlies Gipson was at the free-throw line for a one-and-one opportunity.

Gipson converted on both free-throw attempts to extend the Wildcats' lead to three, and a desperation 3-point shot by Louisiana Tech sophomore Eboni Mangum went wide at the buzzer. Gipson finished with 10 points, six rebounds and three blocks.

K-State had a 38-18 lead late in the first half and seemingly had control of the game. They shot 58.6 percent from the field and took a 43-27 lead into halftime.

But things turned ugly in the second half as the Wildcats shot just 29.2 percent and got sloppy with the basketball. They finished with 29 turnovers, some of which translated into easy Louisiana Tech baskets, helping the Lady Techsters narrow the gap.

However, with less than four minutes left in the game, Dietz made a 3-point jump shot to give the Wildcats a 62-57 lead, helping her team escape with a tough road victory in a building where wins are often tough to come by.

FBC | Campbell named Defensive Player of the Year by Chronicle

Sophomore defensive end Ian Campbell headlined a group of three Wildcats named to the Houston Chronicle's 2006 All-Big 12 football teams Tuesday as he was tabbed the league's Defensive Player of the Year.

Linebacker Brandon Archer also garnered first-team honors by the publication, while punt returner Yamon Figurs was named to the second team.

Campbell, a former walk-on who has blossomed into one of the nation's top rush ends, consistently ranked among the country's leaders in both sacks and tackles for losses during 2006.

The Big 12's top tackler among defensive linemen with 60 stops, Campbell tied the K-State single-season record for sacks with 11.5 on the year and heads into the bowl season ranked fifth nationally in that category. He also led the Big 12 in tackles for losses with 16.5, a figure that ranks 19th in the country.

Archer, K-State's leading tackler for the third straight season, picked up his third consecutive second team all-league designation from the Kansas City Star after ranking sixth in the Big 12 during the regular season with a career, single-season-best 97 tackles.

Figurs, who was selected to the second team as a return specialist, finished the season ranked second in the Big 12 and 16th nationally in punt returns after averaging 12.2 yards on 20 attempts.

GLF | Former K-State golfer falls a stroke short of earning tour card

Aaron Watkins, a K-State letterwinner from 2001 to 2004, came up one stroke short of earning a spot on the 2007 PGA Tour, as the final round of Q-School was held Monday at the PGA West Stadium and Jack Nicklaus Tournament courses.

Watkins finished the six-round, 108-hole event at 7-under-par 425 to tie for 41st, one stroke shy of the 8-under-par 424 cut line of the top 30 spots and ties.

However, with the tie for 41st, Watkins becomes fully exempt for the 2007 nationwide tour, a developmental tour for the PGA Tour. The top 20 members on the nationwide money list each year are given memberships for the PGA Tour the following year.

FBC | Missouri running back pleads to lesser charge in assault case

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri running back Tony Temple pleaded guilty Tuesday to a reduced charge in a misdemeanor assault case stemming from a fight in a restaurant parking lot.

The junior tailback was sentenced to 18 months of unsupervised probation and 20 hours of community service after pleading guilty to disturbing the peace. He also was ordered to not contact the victim.

Temple initially faced misdemeanor assault charges for allegedly punching a Bannigan's worker in the face and mouth in a June dispute involving Temple's girlfriend, a former Missouri softball player who worked at the Columbia restaurant.

A Missouri football spokesman said he didn't expect Temple to face any additional disciplinary action. Coach Gary Pinkel suspended Temple from the team for summer conditioning drills, but Temple returned to become the leading rusher for the Tigers (8-4).

BBN | Carpenter signs 5-year $63.5 million deal with Cardinals

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — The St. Louis Cardinals announced a $63.5 million, five-year deal with 2005 NL Cy Young Award winner Chris Carpenter on Monday, locking him up through the 2011 season. The deal also includes a club option for 2012 that would bring the total value to $77.5 million.

Carpenter was 15-8 with a 3.09 ERA last season, finishing third in Cy Young balloting and helping the Cardinals win their first World Series title in 24 years.

He was 3-1 with a 2.78 ERA in five postseason starts, including the clincher in the division series against the Padres and eight shutout innings in Game 3 of the World Series against the Tigers.

Police advise for extra security during holiday excursions, trips

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Not everyone is interested in spreading Yuletide cheer, and petty bandits could be looking to pilfer a little or a lot of it from others.

Criminals often step up their game during the holidays, especially when a sizable portion of K-State students head home, potentially leaving residences uninhabited for weeks at a time.

"A lot of students in particular leave the area around Christmas, and criminals know the students leave and don't take all their valuable stuff with them," said Capt. John Doebling of the Riley County Police Department.

More problems can arise from the sudden influx of students moving out of apartments and especially the residence halls, said Troy Lane, assistant director of the K-State Police Department.

"We see a spike in thefts each time this semester," he said.

Students making trips to and from their cars often don't lock the doors, leaving them easy prey for a passersby. Alternately, students often fail to secure their rooms between trips, posing a potential double threat.

Lane said this time of year often accompanies a rise in textbook thefts, as the unscrupulous look to capitalize on book buy-backs.

"Lock up behind yourself, or buddy-up with your neighbor," Lane said. "Pick up stuff, and take it with you."

Additional problems come in the form of car burglaries,

Doehling said. As holiday shopping enters its final days, hurried people rushing from store to store often leave recently purchased valuables in plain view. Even if doors are locked, the mechanics of smashing windows are often within the grasp of holiday opportunists.

The solution? Out of sight, out of mind – simply placing things in the trunk often is an effective deterrent, Doehling said.

If students are not moving but plan to leave for extended periods for the holidays, Lane said making sure windows and doors are locked is the best defense.

"All you can really do is lock it up, and if somebody is determined to get in and get something, they're going to get it," he said.

NEW YORK CITY 1ST TO BAN TRANS FATS

NEW YORK – New York on Tuesday became the first city in the nation to ban artery-clogging artificial trans fats at restaurants, leading the charge to limit consumption of an ingredient linked to heart disease and used in everything from french fries to pizza dough to pancake mix.

In a city where eating out is a common form of activity, either for fun or out of hectic necessity, many New Yorkers said they were all for the ban as health concerns were more important than fears of Big Brother supervising their stomachs.

Health and nutrition groups say artificial trans fats clearly contribute to heart disease.

Studies have shown they raise bad cholesterol and lower the good kind. Partially hydrogenated vegetable oil, the main form of artificial trans fats, is used for frying and baking and turns up in a host of processed foods: cookies, pizza dough, crackers and pre-made blends like pancake mix.

WORLD POWERS DO NOT REACH ACCORD ON U.N. RESOLUTION ON IRAN

PARIS – Six world powers made "substantive progress" but failed to reach an accord on a U.N. resolution to punish Iran for defying U.N. demands to halt its nuclear program, the French Foreign Ministry said after talks in Paris Tuesday.

Tehran made a new threat of retaliation if the powers opted for sanctions.

"We made substantive progress on the scope of the sanctions targeting proliferation-sensitive activities. There remain several outstanding issues, upon which we will reflect over the coming days," the French ministry said in a statement. "We are now close to a conclusion of this process."

The talks brought together diplomats from the United States, Britain, China, France and Russia – the permanent members of the U.N. Security Council – as well as Germany and a representative of EU foreign policy chief Javier Solana.

Zachary Russell, 5, gives a hug to a Santa Claus puppet played by Hailey Gillespie, graduate student in theater. Members of speech communication professor Sally Bailey's creative dramatics class performed a puppet show Tuesday afternoon at the Manhattan Public Library.

Class writes, performs show for local children

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Puppets danced Tuesday afternoon during a show for preschoolers and their parents in the Manhattan Public Library auditorium.

The show was performed by members of Sally Bailey's creative dramatics class and was the final project for the year. Other units the class included storytelling, games and improvisation.

"This is a great way for my students to get a taste of what performing is like," said Bailey, associate professor of speech communication, theater and dance. "It is not like stage performance though, since the performers cannot make eye contact with the audience."

The students, who represent a variety of majors, created an entire show based on children's stories.

Everything, including the puppets, were made by the students.

There was only one performance of the show because it was the group's final project.

Nick Robinson, senior in theater, was among the students who helped with the event.

"I really liked the experience," Robinson said. "It was a different type of performing, and I think that I am going to do this some more."

The students had five weeks to design a show, write the script and prepare for the performance.

"I was a little nervous about the show, but once it started, I got more confidence," Meredith Holland, senior in women's studies, said.

"I played Petunia the goose in my show," she said. "I had never done a puppet show before. It has always been stage performance."

Jennifer Adams, children's services manager for the Manhattan Public Library, said parents from the community called her to ask when the show will take place.

"The community really enjoys the shows, and we enjoy having them here," she said.

"It gives the students a wonderful opportunity, and the kids really love the shows."

TATTOOS | Younger businesses more accepting you may be able to display those in different ways."

Williams said she has seen a trend in young businesses regarding how accepting they are about body art.

"Those business people who are younger, hipper and don't pander to the community's elite, however that might be defined, are much more likely to be progressive in their attitudes toward body art and piercings."

For interviews of any kind, Keller said she suggests removing any visible body piercings other than earrings and trying not to display tattoos.

"I think if that's really part of your identity, and you feel strongly that you should just be who you are, that's great, but you may have to realize some organizations are going to be more open to it than others," she said. "That's a value judgment you just have to make."

KEMP | District attorney says Appleby's intent was sex

Sentencing was scheduled for Dec. 26.

On Monday, the jury watched a videotape of Appleby telling Leawood detectives he had gone to pool to check it out as a potential client. He said he found Kemp attractive and tried to "hit on her," then "lost it" when she rebuffed his advance and swung at him.

"I killed her," Appleby said on the tape. "I strangled her, I guess. I don't know what I used. There was something laying there."

Defense lawyers startled the courtroom when they acknowledged in opening statements last week that Appleby had killed Kemp but that the murder was not premeditated.

They contended he believed Kemp was alive when he left her and that he should be convicted of a lesser charge than capital murder.

But District Attorney Paul Morrison, who takes office next month as Kansas' newly elected attorney general, maintained that Appleby went into the pool's pump room intending to have sex with Kemp. After she fought with him, Morrison said, Appleby beat and strangled Kemp.

Morrison argued that under Kansas law, the capital murder charge applied because the murder occurred during an attempted rape.

In his closing argument Tuesday, Morrison said the murder was premeditated and Appleby intentionally killed Kemp when she rebuffed his sexual advances.

Kemp's father had waged a national publicity campaign to find his daughter's killer.

Roger Kemp helped set up a $50,000 reward fund, got billboards put up around the Kansas City area seeking information on his daughter's killer and bought advertisements in USA Today.

Her case also was the subject of "America's Most Wanted" segments.

Tainted Taco Bells used same food distributor, company says

By Angela Delli Santi
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTH PLAINFIELD, N.J. — All 11 Taco Bells implicated in an E. coli outbreak used the same food distributor, the restaurant chain said Tuesday as health officials tried to pinpoint the source of the bacteria that sickened at least three dozen people.

Nine people remain hospitalized in New Jersey and New York, including an 11-year-old boy in stable condition with kidney damage.

Taco Bell Corp., a subsidiary of Yum! Brands Inc., said it had sanitized its nine closed restaurants. At least five — all in Long Island, N.Y. — had reopened by Tuesday evening.

"We have no indication what the source is," spokesman Rob Poetsch said. "We're looking into all possibilities."

The distributor, Texas-based McLane Co., said Taco Bell representatives and state and federal health inspectors toured the distribution center in Burlington, N.J., that supplied the eight Long Island restaurants and the three in New Jersey.

"It involves tracking your way back and trying to see if by process of elimination you can determine the root cause," said Bart McKay, a lawyer for McLane.

He said McLane distributes to all Taco Bells in New Jersey and the New York City area, but he had no estimate on how many that is.

The case has underscored the risk of widespread outbreaks of food poisoning at fast-food chains.

"Fast-food restaurants don't purchase ingredients down the street at the local farmers market. They purchase food nationally, process it nationally and ship it across the country," said Carol Tucker Foreman, head of the Food Policy Institute at the Consumer Federation of America.

However, Taco Bell ships its beef-and-bean fillings to restaurants pre-cooked and pre-seasoned to save money, and industry experts said that practice may be safer, because the food is handled by fewer people and is heated twice — once at the plant and once at the individual restaurants.

New Jersey health officials said their investigation would probably focus on produce, not just meat, because some of the 23 people who ate at New Jersey Taco Bells and were infected with E. coli were vegetarians.

E. coli is found in the feces of humans and livestock. Most E. coli infections are associated with undercooked meat.

The bacteria also can be found on sprouts or leafy vegetables such as spinach. The germs can be passed from person to person if they do not thoroughly wash their hands after using the bathroom.

New Jersey's health commissioner said the most recent case of E. coli was reported Nov. 29, so the danger of infection may have passed.

Two of the 11 restaurants implicated — both in New Jersey — were inspected and remained open.

Also Tuesday, the Pennsylvania Health Department said it was investigating an E. coli outbreak that sickened four people in suburban Philadelphia to determine if it was linked to the New York and New Jersey outbreak.

Three of those who fell ill at the end of November had eaten at a Taco Bell, department spokesman Troy Thompson said. Two were hospitalized and released.

The nine Taco Bell restaurants located in Montgomery County were voluntarily closing as a precaution, the Montgomery County Health Department said in a statement.

E. coli, or Escherichia coli, is a common and ordinarily harmless bacteria, but certain strains can cause abdominal cramps, fever, bloody diarrhea, kidney failure, blindness, paralysis, even death.

— Associated Press writers Beth Defalco in Trenton, N.J., Nahal Toosi in New York, and Gillian Flaccus in Irvine, Calif., contributed to this report.

Book review by Jeremy Roberts

When engaging in pulling of pranks, stay away from point of no return

The tag line for John Austin's "Prank University: The Ultimate Guide to College's Greatest Tradition" is, "Why show compassion to your roommates when you can terrorize them to the point of insanity?"

The tag line holds true throughout this book. "Prank University," by toy designer and first-time author Austin, details 100 pranks aimed at college students.

They never get old with classics like the flaming bag of dog feces, and creative, new ideas like the sticky shower, which involves Kool-Aid in the shower head, and plastic forking, which includes the placement of 600 plastic forks in your victim's lawn.

Not only are the ideas witty, but the descriptions also are written in a way that makes them easy to read and entertaining. Each prank description is only about a paragraph long and is accompanied with equally entertaining illustrations. I was impressed that the author not only wrote the book but also illustrated it.

Most drawings of the pranks are done so well you don't even have to know how to read to pull off the prank yourself, which is perfect for the average college student.

Since the book is aimed at college students, it makes sense almost every prank in the book is cheap or free. There is a symbol system in place with each prank to scale its difficulty, price range, when it should be done and if it is too good not to videotape.

My only criticism is the severity of some pranks. While the book warns in its descriptions that things could go badly for the prankster, it doesn't consider the damages many of these pranks can cause to the victim and, if caught, the perpetrator's wallet.

To read about the 10 greatest college pranks, visit the Collegian Web site at www.kstatecollegian.com.

Pranks like wrapping a car in plastic wrap are common and taken in good humor, but placing bologna slices all over a car to be boiled by the morning sun can damage the paint and make the car look like a cheetah.

I don't think suggesting you change the peep hole in a girl's dorm room to look into the room so you can get, as the book calls it, a free show, is such a good idea. Welcome to, as the book states, "Bad Behavior 101."

Some of the pranks are downright, morally wrong. For example, one prank involves going into a dorm laundry room when no one is there and placing a cup of bleach in each machine so that all the people that do their laundry shortly thereafter will have all their colored clothing permanently color-altered.

Many of these pranks aren't meant for your friends or roommates unless you want to tick them off to the point of no return. While it could be funny to switch out your roommate's copy of "Forrest Gump" with the porno film "Forrest Hump," he might not be as forgiving if you shave off his eyebrows. The book warns revenge most likely will be sought and advises hiding your copy of the book in that situation.

If you ever get tired of placing alternative personal ads in the newspaper for your friend or placing porn as a screensaver on his computer, you always can wait for him to pass out and pull the 98 other pranks waiting for you in "Prank University."

Check out the www.prankuniversity.com for prank videos, pranks rated by users and tips on the latest pranks.

'Yes Men' Strike Again

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

To the audience members gathered at the Pontchartrain Center in Kenner, La., a speaker introduced himself as Rene Oswin, assistant deputy secretary for the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, or HUD.

At an Aug. 28 meeting, a group of about 1,000 builders and contractors congregated to listen to a speech aimed toward HUD reversal policies in the rebuilding of the Katrina destruction. During the lecture, Oswin said the federal government is planning to spend $180 million to fund public-health clinics for every housing development. The speech also featured a promise from Wal-Mart to withdraw its store from a low-income housing area so it could be replaced by local businesses.

There were a few problems, however. Nobody at HUD had ever heard of Rene Oswin, and all the statements he made in the speech were entirely false.

The lecture by "Oswin" was nothing but a hoax, and everyone fell for it, including Louisiana Gov. Kathleen Blanco and New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin, who both personally thanked the imposter before the lecture.

William Loiry, president of meeting sponsor Equity International, admitted to CNN that he too was duped.

In another CNN interview, Donna White, HUD spokesperson, described the prank as sick, twisted and not funny. She also said HUD was trying to track the perpetrators down.

So who pulled off such a remarkable prank? It was none other than The Yes Men, a group of activists who practice what they call identity correction.

The group has created quite a name for itself in recent years, pranking the public with impersonations of the world's most powerful criminals and businessmen at conferences, on the Internet and on television. Its method of choice often is satire, in which the group's members pose as corporate or government spokespeople. Among the Yes Men's victims are The World Trade Organization, McDonald's and Dow Chemical. Their antics have resulted in false news reports of the demise of the WTO and Dow Chemical paying for a Union Carbide cleanup.

In recent years, the group's two leading members have been known only by a number of aliases. These men go by Mike Bonanno and Andy Bichlbaum, which are names featured in their most recent film, "The Yes Men." Along with their film, the Yes Men have published a book titled, "The Yes Men: The True Story of the End of the World Trade Organization." Both of these document the group's political pranks.

The Yes Men said they plan to use their newfound authority to express the idea that corporations and governmental organizations often act in dehumanizing ways toward the public.

Off the Field

The best of 2006

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Throughout this football season, I have had the privilege of asking sometimes interesting, sometimes useless questions for the weekly off-the-field session.

While asking these questions, I did get the occasional guffaw or "What in the world are you talking about," so I usually tried to isolate myself and the player from the rest of the media. The players were much more open, and I felt less awkward asking about their favorite nicknames away from a formal press conference.

Without further ado, here are the best off-the-field questions and answers of this football season.

THOMAS CLAYTON

Q. First of all, how do you get so buff and muscular?

A. You can ask a lot of people at (Peters Recreation Complex). I'm there every day. After practice, I probably spend about two hours at the Rec, eat well and then go to sleep. It comes down to working hard, eating well and getting good sleep.

MARCUS PERRY

Q. A few weeks ago you were quoted as saying one of your goals on special teams was to make people bleed. How many people have you actually made bleed?

A. You can take that any way. Making them bleed can mean turning their head and making them shy away from me. It can mean looking a kid in the eyes and going down and hit him, and he backs off or you knock the crap out of him. It may mean making somebody bleed to make sure they know you are hurting them.

JEFF SNODGRASS

Q. Did you ever have people make fun of your name or come up with interesting nicknames?

A. I have got a bunch. You have "Snod-ass," "Booger-wheat," "Snot-turf" and anything you can turn into "grass" or "snot."

LOGAN ROBINSON

Q. Is it true you were not permitted to practice with the rest of your team in high school?

A. My junior year, the first day of padded practice, we were doing a tackling drill, and I broke a player's leg, so my coach told me I was not allowed to do that for the rest of the season. Whenever we were running plays, the person I was supposed to block had to hold an arm shield or a dummy and I would go up and hit the dummy instead of them. I wasn't allowed to do tackling drills or things like that for fear of hurting my other teammates.

REGGIE WALKER

Q. On your player biography, it says you were part of a math club in high school. What is that about?

A. Our teacher said that if we joined the math club, she would give us 30 or 40 points of extra credit. I'm not the best math student, so I jumped all over that.

OFFENSE

☐ K-State's offense has been hit-or-miss this season. It scored 30 points or more in three consecutive games at one point, but it also had three games in which it was held to single digits. Much depends on quarterback Josh Freeman, whom Ron Prince dubbed capable of heroics earlier in the season. We'll see if he was right in Houston.

☒ The Scarlet Knights boast a balanced offense. Quarterback Mike Teel threw for 1,867 yards, while running back Raymell Rice totaled 1,624 yards and had 19 rushing touchdowns. However, Teel did show some mental lapses, throwing more interceptions than touchdowns, and might be exploitable.

DEFENSE

☐ Of late, the K-State defense has been a shred of what it was early in the season. The Wildcats have surrendered 21 or more points in each of the team's last three games, something that happened just twice in the first eight games of the season. Fortunately, safety Marcus Watts has said he will be fit to play in the bowl game and might give the Wildcats the jumpstart they need.

☒ Rutgers' defense is definitely what carried the team to the brink of BCS contention this season. In 11 games, the Scarlet Knights held opponents to an average of 14.7 points per game. Additionally, Rutgers was able to put a great deal of pressure on opposing quarterbacks, with 38 sacks this season. If Rutgers can pressure Freeman, it could be a long day for the Wildcats.

SPECIAL TEAMS

☒ If there has been one constant in the Wildcats' play this season, it is the special teams. K-State consistently has kept itself in key situations and by being able to place confidence in kicker Jeff Snodgrass when the game is on the line. If K-State can keep pace with Rutgers, the special teams players just might be the heroes once more.

☐ Rutgers' special teams are another big reason for the team's breakout season. The Scarlet Knights return men have three touchdowns this year, and kicker Jeremy Ito has converted 19-of-24 field goals, including two from beyond 50 yards. Also, punter Joe Radigan is averaging 44 yards per punt. All in all, Rutgers' special teams look solid.

PREDICTION

When two unfamiliar teams meet in a bowl game, it is always difficult to predict how they will adapt to one another. On paper Rutgers is the clear favorite, but if Yamon Figurs and Marcus Watts are healthy, the Wildcats might catch the Scarlet Knights off guard. Look for K-State to revert back to the "bold and daring" offense Prince has made famous in Manhattan and make this more of a contest than many expect it to be.

PHOTOS COURTESY OF RUTGERS SPORTS INFORMATION
Greg Schiano led Rutgers to only the second 10-win season in school history. The Scarlet Knights finished the 2006 season ranked No. 16.

Rutgers goes from conference joke to near top in Schiano's 6 years

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Greg Schiano took over as coach of the Rutgers football program on Dec. 1, 2000, he had a vision for what he wanted to accomplish.

"This program will be built on a rock foundation," he said at the time. "It will take longer than building it on stilts, but when it's built, it will be built forever."

Six years later, on the heels of an improbable 10-2 season and a No. 16 ranking, Rutgers is considered one of the nation's most up-and-coming programs. The team will be on display Dec. 28 when it takes on K-State in the inaugural Texas Bowl in Houston.

It is the first time in school history Rutgers has made back-to-back bowl games. Last year it lost 45-40 to Arizona State in the Insight Bowl.

But the bowl berth is bittersweet, Schiano said, as his team had its sights set higher. After starting the season with a 9-0 record, the Scarlet Knights had a legitimate chance to capture the Big East title and make a Bowl Championship Series bowl, which would have been the first in school history.

Instead, the team lost two of its last three games — first to Cincinnati and then to No. 13 West Virginia on Dec. 2 — and had to settle for the Texas Bowl.

"It was one of our goals to be Big East champs, and to come as close as we did without achieving, it certainly hurts," Schiano said. "But in the 137 years of football (at Rutgers), we've only been to two bowl games, so we're thrilled to be going to another bowl game."

Four years ago in 2002, no one — except maybe Schiano himself — expected Rutgers to make such a quick climb. The team was the laughingstock of college football, struggling to a 1-11 record, its lone win coming against Army. However, Schiano stayed the course, and now the Rutgers program is reaping the benefits.

K-State coach Ron Prince said he is familiar with many of the Rutgers players, as his former school, Virginia, spent time recruiting some of the players on the Scarlet Knights' current roster.

"I'm pretty aware of just how talented they are," Prince said. "It's a testament to the coach on how many terrific players are on that roster, and this is no question a nationally talented team."

One reason for Rutgers' success has been its running game. It is one of the nation's top rushing teams, led by sophomore Raymell Rice's 1,624 yards and 19 touchdowns. Rice is a Heisman Trophy candidate and the face of Rutgers' resurgence.

"They are a tough team. They run the football as well as anybody," Prince said. "Rice is a terrific runner, and it doesn't surprise me that they can really run it with the offensive line that they have."

The rest of the team is sound both offensively and defensively and, as Prince noted, is well-coached. Though the disappointment of missing out on a BCS bowl game is evident, Schiano said his program still has a lot to play.

"It's my job to get us out of our funk and to get us back on task," Schiano said a day after his team's loss to West Virginia eliminated them from BCS contention.

"I think we're going to be fine. We are going to get back to work, and certainly it's another opportunity for our program to take another step."

Teams should have winning record, 1 road win for eligibility

Here's a challenge for your holiday season: try to watch every single bowl game over winter break.

JONATHAN GARTEN

You might be a little busy. This year's bowl line-up includes 32 games. There are so many bowls that even Canada will play host to one, which will mark the first time a postseason game will be played outside of the United States since 1937.

Thirty-two games means 64 teams will be rewarded with a postseason match-up. There are only 119 teams in Division I-A college football, meaning more than half of the teams will get a nice Christmas bonus.

Under the current system, the only requirement for bowl eligibility is six wins.

We're basically encouraging teams to be average.

Here are a few new rules that could weed out the weak:

NO DIVISION I-AA WINS

This one is simple. Division I-A teams shouldn't get credit for beating schools that aren't even good enough to play in the Sun Belt Conference.

I guess if big schools really want to put The Citadel on their schedule, nobody should stop them.

However, it shouldn't count toward their win total.

This rule would eliminate teams like Iowa, which got one of its six wins by beating

Big Sky Conference powerhouse Montana.

FINISH ABOVE .500

Bowl eligibility should be an indicator of success, not the definition of mediocrity.

The best teams should be expected to win more games than they lose. This would get rid of plenty 6-6 teams and make 7-5 the bowl eligibility cutoff.

However, the rules should be different for universities that are not in one of the six Bowl Championship Series conferences — the Big 12, Big 10, Big East, Atlantic Coast Conference, Southeastern Conference and Pacific 10. Non-BCS teams must go 8-4 to be bowl-eligible because they play weaker competition.

*Loophole: Any non-BCS team with a 7-5 record and at least one win against a BCS school also will be eligible for postseason play. This would protect teams like East Carolina (7-5), which holds two victories over BCS universities.

AT LEAST 1 ROAD WIN

A bowl game is basically a glorified road game. Therefore, a team should have to demonstrate it can win on the road to prove it is worthy of going bowling.

This would eliminate Alabama (6-6), which has not won a game outside of Bryant-Denny Stadium.

Granted, Alabama had a tough road schedule — then No. 8 Arkansas, No. 4 Florida, No. 17 Tennessee and No. 5 LSU. However, Alabama still could have scheduled a road game for one of its non-conference games instead of playing four scrub teams at home.

That would be the point of this rule.

Force all these large conference teams to go on the road every once in a while instead of scheduling as many home cupcake games as they can.

SCHEDULE 2 BCS CONFERENCE TEAMS

Ever wonder which conference has the tougher competition?

There's a simple way to find out: make them play each other. If the fifth best team from the SEC beats both the second-best team from the Big 12 and the Big East champion, it probably is safe to assume the SEC has tougher competition.

This also would help in those pesky BCS debates about which one-loss team deserves to play for the national championship.

5 most memorable moments

By Anthony Mendoza
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

You never knew what to expect from K-State on a weekly basis. From a one-point win over a Division I-AA opponent to a dazzling defeat of the No. 4 nationally ranked team, the Wildcats always managed to keep fans on the edge of their seats. One thing K-State fans know about their program is they will be playing one more game, qualifying for a bowl appearance for the first time in two seasons. Here are some of the memorable moments from the season that led the team into postseason play.

WIN OVER NO. 4 TEXAS >>>

Arguably one of the biggest wins in the history of the program and the signature victory for first-year coach Ron Prince. The K-State offense went point for point with the high-powered Longhorn attack. True freshman quarterback Josh Freeman led the way with 269 yards passing and three touchdowns in the 45-42 win on Nov. 11. K-State forced three turnovers in the third quarter, outscoring Texas 21-0 during the stretch, breaking a 21-21 tie. The Longhorns were without freshman sensation Colt McCoy, who was injured on a quarterback sneak for a touchdown on the Longhorns' first offensive series of the game.

<<< COMEBACK AGAINST OKLAHOMA STATE

Prince had put an offensive muzzle on Freeman throughout the game, but in the fourth quarter, Prince turned his freshman quarterback loose. Freeman completed 6-of-7 passes for 128 yards in the final four minutes of the game, bringing K-State back from 10 points down to defeat Oklahoma State 31-27 on Oct. 7 at Snyder Family Stadium. Freeman scored the game-winning touchdown on a 21-yard scamper with 1:11 remaining in the game.

LETDOWN IN LAWRENCE

K-State had the chance to wrap up sole possession of second place in the Big 12 North and keep Kansas from becoming bowl-eligible, but the Wildcats were plagued by turnovers and penalties in their 39-20 loss in Lawrence. Freeman, who was coming off consecutive Big 12 Conference Offensive Player of the Week honors, accounted for all six of K-State's turnovers in the game, leading to 30 Jayhawk points. Kansas running back Jon Cornish finished with a career-high 201 yards rushing and two touchdowns. It was the first time the Wildcat defense allowed a player to rush for 200 or more yards in a game since Iowa State running back Troy Davis ran for 225 yards in 1996.

SHOESTRING WIN

The Prince era began with the unveiling of the new video board attached to the side of Bramlage Coliseum. Then there was the stadium dedication to former coach Bill Snyder, followed by the new entrance onto the field by the players, but the day ended in a nail-biting 24-23 win over Division I-AA Illinois State on Sept. 2. Trailing by a point, Redbirds coach Denver Johnson decided to go for the two-point conversion and the win instead of tying it up with a point after touchdown attempt. Defensive end Ian Campbell made a shoe-string tackle on Illinois State quarterback Luke Drone short of the end zone to secure Prince his first win as a K-State coach.

<<< BOWLIN' IN BOULDER

K-State had not been to a bowl game since 2003 and had not won on the road since 2004, when it defeated Missouri 35-24 on Nov. 6. The Wildcats accomplished all that in one game by defeating Colorado 34-21 at Folsom Field on Nov. 4. K-State jumped out to a 17-0 first-half lead, but the Buffaloes battled back in the second half and pulled to within six points with 13:18 remaining in the game. But Freeman connected with wide receiver Jordy Nelson on a 74-yard pass for a touchdown to bring the Wildcats' lead to 27-14. Five minutes later, wide receiver Yamon Figurs' 30-yard rushing touchdown sealed K-State's win.

Several hurt players say they'll play in bowl game

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State football reporters were reunited with a familiar face at the Nov. 21 press conference.

Junior safety Marcus Watts arrived at the Vanier Football Complex with a purple cast covering his right hand. Watts injured the hand while blocking a punt during a 31-28 win over Oklahoma State on Oct. 7. He played with the injury for the following two weeks but has not suited up since the first half of the Missouri game on Oct. 21.

But because coach Ron Prince limits the information released about injuries, the problem with Watts' hand remains a mystery. Watts described it as an "unfortunate injury."

"You know we can't talk about it," Watts said.

Whatever the injury is, it doesn't seem to have Watts worried about missing K-State's game with Rutgers in the Texas Bowl on Dec. 28. He said everything is on pace and he should be able to join his team at practice as soon as this week.

Watts' presence at the press conference also might be an indicator of his status. Watts was unavailable for comment for the entire time of his injury.

When the Wildcats play in the Texas Bowl later this month, it will be the first time they've played in more than a month. The extra time off could prove to be valuable for K-State, especially with so many players trying to get cleared to play in time for the bowl game.

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Junior safety Marcus Watts expects to play in the Texas Bowl on Dec. 28. Watts injured his right hand against Oklahoma State on Oct. 7.

"It's going to be one of those things where there is a significant amount of time between now and the game," Prince said at the Nov. 21 press conference. "In all, it will be very positive because, how it all lines up, we'll have a chance to get our people back."

Freshman cornerback Joshua Moore is another player who will be trying to get healthy in time for K-State's bowl game. Moore was carted off the field during the second half of K-State's 39-20 loss to Kansas on Nov. 18, but Prince said he is optimistic Moore will return.

Prince said senior wide receiver Yamon Figurs has said he won't miss his final chance to play as a Wildcat. Figurs missed the season finale against Kansas because of an injury he sustained against Texas.

"It was really tough to just watch the (Kansas) game," Figurs said. "The doctor didn't clear me to play, so there was really nothing I could do."

Watts predicted his return to the line-up as soon as he learned K-State was bowl-eligible. Following K-State's 34-21 win over Colorado on Nov. 4, he flooded Prince's BlackBerry with messages claiming he would be ready for a bowl game.

"I told him that I was going to be back," Watts said. "There wasn't anything that could keep me from playing in a bowl game."

To make sure his prediction will come true, Watts has been doing everything the medical staff will allow him to do. He said he started lifting weights about a month ago and will practice as soon as he can.

Watts said he learned a lot about dealing with injuries while recovering from a dislocated hip before this season. After seeing that recovery, Prince said he knew what Watts was capable of.

"Marcus says he's playing," Prince said. "I've known him well enough here recently to not bet against him."

A bright future

K-State surprises critics in 2006, but 2007 could be better

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This could be just the beginning.

Lost somewhere between bowl eligibility and the shocker of Texas were recollections of predictions that this was supposed to be a transition year for new coach Ron Prince and his football team.

There weren't supposed to be any more games after Nov. 18, but the Wildcats proved their critics wrong and stuck together when things became difficult.

Was it a magical season? In Prince's opinion, not quite. He said he is pleased with the way the season played out, but he had hoped for much more.

"Would we have liked to be in the (Big 12 Conference) Championship game? You betcha," he said. "It was my goal to get to Kansas City, (Mo.), and that didn't happen. We'll obviously work diligently to make that happen next year."

Next year is something Wildcat fans can now look forward to. K-State's appearance against No. 16 Rutgers in the Texas Bowl at Houston's Reliant Stadium on Dec. 28 certainly will be a nice cap to this season, but dreams of an even more memorable 2007-08 season already are dancing in fans' heads.

Due to the use of a large number of young players, the Wildcats should return 15 starters — eight on offense and seven on defense. The emergence of freshman quarterback Josh Freeman and freshman running back Leon Patton mean the offense will have a solid foundation for the next few years.

Defensively, the four exiting starters all will be missed, but defensive coordinator Raheem Morris improved a defense that struggled in recent years. With an additional year to develop his talent, Morris should be able to produce another solid unit.

Yes, after Dec. 28, fans will have to wait until April to see next season's team begin to take shape. However, it's never too early to start dreaming.

THE OFFENSE

Freeman undoubtedly will be the face of this team for the next two or three years, depending on how long he opts to stay in school.

The Kansas City, Mo., native wooed the Wildcat faithful when he plunged into the end zone to beat Oklahoma State. He made himself known to the nation with his four-touchdown performance in the 45-42 upset of Texas on national television.

As if the 18-year-old hasn't already proven enough, Freeman will have a shot to set the stage for next year with a strong performance in the Texas Bowl. In many cases, a young quarterback can pave the way to a record-setting career by playing well in his first bowl game.

In 1994, Tennessee quarterback Peyton Manning completed 12-of-19 passes for 189 yards as the Volunteers defeated Virginia Tech 45-23 in the Gator Bowl. Manning went on to break almost every Tennessee passing record.

"A bowl game's always a privilege," Freeman said. "You can't take it for granted, being in a bowl game. I look at it as a privilege, as I'm sure a lot of other guys do."

The rest of the offense should continue the strides it made throughout the season. Patton led the team with 595 rushing yards and six touchdowns this season, and the quick, shifty running back could have a huge season next year with more opportunities.

The offensive line struggled at the season's start, but it found its groove once Freeman was placed under center. The offensive line is losing seniors Greg Wafford and Michael Friesen, but the youth of the unit should improve with another year under their belts.

THE DEFENSE

The loss of defensive tackle Quintin Echols, linebackers Zach Diles and Brandon Archer and safety Kyle Williams will hurt. All four seniors provided great statistical seasons, but their leadership on the field will be missed the most.

Defensive ends Ian Campbell and Rob Jackson should anchor 2007's defensive line, if not the entire defense. Campbell broke out this year to earn First Team All-Big 12 honors after notching 11.5 sacks. He and Jackson will have to provide a lot of pressure on the quarterback to help the rest of the defense.

The secondary also could be

Christopher Hanewinkel

a strength for the Wildcats. Safety Marcus Watts was doing well before his thumb injury, and he'll be back for his final season. A possible replacement for Williams could be Gary Chandler — a safety for Coffeyville (Kan.) Community College. He was rated the No. 4 overall junior college player according to Rivals.com, and he will join the team this spring.

OVERALL OUTLOOK

K-State can't overlook their bowl game by focusing too much on 2007, but spirits will be high heading into next fall. Prince exceeded expectations of a first-year coach — as did Freeman for a first-year quarterback — and it will be interesting to see what these two, along with the rest of the team, can accomplish in the second go-round.

Study abroad office faces challenges with communication, compensation

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Three students walked into the Study Abroad Office searching for their adviser Tuesday afternoon only to find he had not worked in the office since earlier this semester.

"We were not even informed that the adviser that we had last semester does not work with the office any longer, and that we have a new contact," said Jay Knopf, fourth-year student in landscape architecture.

Knopf, Sean Ray and Nolan Miller, all fourth-year students in landscape architecture, are required to have an internship or study abroad during the second semester of their fourth year. The three men will attend the University of Western Australia in Perth, Australia.

Ray said the first time he contacted the study abroad office, which is under the Office of International Programs, everything seemed organized.

"I sat down with my adviser, Kevin Spears, and we went over everything I needed to know about travel, enrollment, housing, etc.," Ray said. "However, this semester it has been a lot harder to contact advisers in the office when I have a question."

Miscommunication led these three men to visit the office Tuesday.

"We went to the office then because we hadn't received a response to an e-mail sent the day before, because it was a very time-sensitive matter," Ray said.

Applications for the program at UWA were due Friday, but when Ray contacted UWA, he was told they had not received the applications. The study abroad office was supposed to mail the applications for the students, Ray said.

"When we went to the office, we were told our adviser was out of town until Nov. 30, but it was OK, because the applications weren't actually due until Dec. 30, and they still had them and would mail them soon," Ray said.

"Later that day, I checked on the UWA Web site and found out that the applications were actually due on Dec. 1, so I called the OIP (Office of International Programs) and talked to someone different who told me they had sent the applications and received FedEx confirmation that they were received by UWA.

"Honestly, I still don't know what's going on, but I'm at the point where I would rather have done everything on my own instead of depending on the Office of International Programs to do it for me," Ray said.

Miller said he was disappointed with the help from the study abroad office.

"Of all the offices to be organized and on top of things, I would think they would be one of the best," Miller said. "However, I cannot truly say one good thing about them. I just do not expect much out of them anymore."

Knopf said he thought more services would be included for the fees he paid.

"I expected that the paperwork that we paid them for would be turned in before the deadline with no doubt that I would be accepted to the host university," Knopf said.

STUDY ABROAD FEES

Each student who studies abroad through K-State is required to pay a $50 application fee and an administration fee that can be $200 for a summer or $450 for a fall or spring semester. Students who are studying for a year or more will be charged the full amount for the first semester and then pay $200 for each additional semester. These fees are separate from tuition and any additional program costs.

Jen Smith, coordinator for faculty-led group programs in the study abroad office, said this

Sebelius to lead Governors Association

By Megan Moser
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius became the chair of the Democratic Governors Association Monday, as the party assumed its first gubernatorial majority in 12 years.

Sebelius succeeds Gov. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., who ended his second term as DGA chair while he considers a bid for the 2008 presidential race. Gov. Joe Manchin, D-W.V., will serve as vice chair.

"It's exciting for her," Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said of Sebelius' new position. "Any time anyone from Kansas is in a leadership position, it's significant."

After enjoying a comfortable reelection margin in November, Sebelius said she looks to make her mark on the national political scene in her second term.

"As the incubators of public policy, what we do in Kansas resonates across the country," Sebelius said in a press conference Tuesday.

The DGA seeks to elect Democratic governors and tends to work on three policy areas: employment, education and health care.

Sebelius plans to add energy to its agenda.

"To declare a willingness to become energy independent while giving states incentives to move research and innovation forward is a great way to approach that kind of initiative," she said.

Carlin supports Sebelius' plans to include energy in the association's policy.

"She's been focusing on things like wind energy and ethanol," Carlin said. "All of us are looking for ways to use clean energy."

The Republican Governors Association also chose new leaders last week.

Gov. Sonny Perdue, R-Ga., will lead the organization, replacing Gov. Mitt Romney, R-Mass., another likely 2008 presidential candidate.

Gov. Matt Blunt, R-Mo., will serve as vice chair.

Students get massages, make crafts at Semester Destresser

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As finals approach, students relaxed by crafting and munching on handmade gingerbread houses and cookies at the Semester Destresser Wednesday night.

The free event in the K-State Student Union was sponsored by the Union Program Council and provided students with free activities, including painting picture frames and decorating gingerbread houses, said Courtney Hauser, junior in journalism and psychology.

"If students want to take a break from studying, it's a nice place to come and hang out," she said.

A table full of paint and glitter was available for students to use to decorate boxes and picture frames. Another table covered in frosted cookies, graham crackers and candy allowed students to make gingerbread houses. Massages also were offered.

Ryan Dietrich, sophomore in landscape architecture, went to the event with friends and received a massage after finishing a project.

"We came down to check it out," Dietrich said. "We had free massages, and that hit the spot."

Kristina Wendt, fifth-year student in elementary education, and her brother, Charlie Wendt, junior in marketing, ate cookies while they made picture frames.

"I'm making mine for a lady friend," Charlie said.

Kristina said she was making a picture frame in which to put her graduation picture. She said she wanted to attend the Semester Destresser because she finished a project this week.

"I needed a good break," she said.

Hauser is a member of UPC and helped plan the event. She said the committee looked at some of the crafts provided last year and decided to continue them this year.

"It's around Christmastime, and money is getting low," she said. "You can give a picture frame to a friend."

Professor honors former K-State president in portrait

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One of K-State's former presidents was honored in a portrait that will hang in Anderson Hall.

Duane Acker, K-State's 11th president, served the university from 1975 to 1986. Acker has remained busy since leaving the university, writing several books and teaching and advising both students and faculty at various universities, he said.

Charles Reagan, assistant to current President Jon Wehler, said this was the first time a former president of the university was honored with a painted portrait.

"Acker is the first, but we plan to have portraits of all 12 presidents painted at some point," Reagan said.

He said all of the portraits will hang in a special section of Anderson.

The artist is Clive Fullagar, associate professor of psychology. Fullagar was given $4,000 in private funds to paint the portrait.

Acker now lives in Atlantic, Iowa. He had a book published less than two months ago and is working on an oral history of his years at K-State.

"I told myself that I didn't want to stay for more than 10 years," he said. "I think that people get the most done in their first few years, and I wanted to make sure that I still have enough time to experience lots of different, interesting things.

"I was also glad to hear that they are putting portraits up of all the past presidents."

Acker said he had trouble thinking of just one of his significant achievements at K-State.

"I like to think I impacted a lot of different aspects of the university and its students," he said.

Acker said increasing the number of National Merit scholarship program semi-finalists from seven, the number K-State had the year his tenure began, to about 50 the year his tenure ended, was one of his greatest successes.

He also noted the additions of Dole Hall, which houses the Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center, and the Chemistry/Biochemistry Building.

This winter, Acker said he will work on several different book ideas.

"My wife and I are heading to our winter home in Florida," he said. "It will give me something to do while I'm there."

Duane Acker, K-State's 11th president, unveils a portrait of himself during a ceremony for the event Nov. 6 in Anderson Hall. Acker served the university in 1975-1986. Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Iran, Saudi Arabia use 3rd parties to fight, classifying Iraq conflict as proxy, not civil, war

With careless disregard, the American media has labeled the situation in Iraq a civil war.

A basic definition of civil war is a war between multiple groups in a state with the sides fighting on all three levels of warfare — strategic, operational and tactical.

American media outlets look at the violence only from inside Iraqi borders. Forces outside Iraq have contributed to a majority of the sectarian violence within the country.

Media outlets are quick to call the conflict in Iraq a civil war, due to their utter contempt for the Bush administration.

Because of our own history, the term "civil war" causes a knee-jerk response among most Americans.

During the 1990s, situations of violence around the globe were not referred to as civil wars.

Outbreaks of violence not considered to be civil war include Bosnia, Somalia, Rwanda, Serbia and Sudan.

When taking into account the power structure of the Middle East, a better description for the situation in Iraq would be to call it a proxy war.

A proxy war is a war between two countries using third parties, so as to not fight directly. Throughout the course of the Cold War, proxy wars were used by both the United States and USSR to expand their influence in the world.

Violence in Iraq has been perpetuated not through the United States' involvement but through the puppet masters of the Middle East pulling the strings.

Whether the United States would like to admit it, Saddam Hussein was important to the balance of power in the Middle East.

Since the demise of the former Iraqi government, the remaining Islamic powers of the region have been fighting to lay claim to the holdings Hussein once had.

The German poet Heinrich Heine wrote, "There are two sorts of rat/The hungry and the fat."

As the key Sunni influence, the morbidly obese rats of Saudi Arabia have become too confident of their influence in the Middle East.

Through arms, financial support and Hezbollah, Iran has spread its influence into the territories of Lebanon, Palestine and Iraq. The Iraqi front is the only region in which the Saudis are attempting to take a stand against the Iranian influence, with connections through the Sunni militias.

Overconfidence is the quickest source of defeat.

Iran is using the Saudis' arrogance against them by supporting other Islamic states behind the Saudis' backs.

The Iranians are "hungry" rats, on the verge of starvation. A Shiite-controlled Iraq would provide much-needed economic assistance to Iran.

According to the Asia Times, Iran's oil production has been decreasing at a rate of one-sixth per year; the economy of Iran is teetering on collapse within the next 10 to 15 years.

Compound the oil situation with an aging workforce, and one can see why the Iranians are working to develop nuclear weapons.

Military power is the only way for the Iranians to remain an influential force in the Middle East.

Iraq has become nothing more than a pawn in a large game of chess.

A destabilized Iraq will cause more problems for the world community, especially in the Middle East.

Brownback's faith guides decisions, doesn't justify opposition

Most of you hopefully have heard Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., has decided to look into pursuing a presidential nomination from the Republican Party.

Well, if you have had any time to mull this over in your head, I would assume your answer to the question, "Does he have a chance?" would be a quick no.

If this is your way of thinking, my friends, I would like to persuade you differently. Brownback, a K-State alumnus, has much more to offer Americans than we give him credit for.

Sure, the media paints him as a far-right religious nut who prays and goes to church (gasp!) and has no shot of running our country. However, I'm pretty sure this senator can do a much better job than any of the Democrats who are considering running for president.

Why? It's quite simple. Brown-back is a caring, intelligent individual who is not concerned with himself or with continually defending his actions. Instead, he stands behind what he believes and isn't easily swayed.

Who has one of the best voting records on human rights in today's society? Barack Obama? Hillary Clinton? John Kerry?

Are you kidding me? It's Sam Brownback. Wait a second. I didn't think a Republican could be concerned with human rights. Well, Jack, the simple fact is that Brownback — no matter how conservative you view him — is extremely involved in pursuing justice for human rights. Human rights, of course, is the safety of, and overall good for, the human race.

Brownback is one of the leading fighters against the terror of the genocide in Sudan. In March 2005 he introduced the Darfur Accountability Act, which calls for sanctions on those committing the atrocities and for these people to be tried in an international court of justice.

There is no doubt Brownback is conservative.

However, it is totally inaccurate and unfair for the media to portray this senator as a far-right, religious politician. Rolling Stone literally crucified Brownback in an issue, presenting him as a lunatic because of his religious beliefs.

Take a look back in history. Those who based their beliefs around faith are definitely lunatics. Who was it that fought for the rights of all peoples — black or white, Catholic or Protestant? Who was it that fought for the rights of "all of God's children"? Oh, that's right. It was the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

But for some reason, Brownback is out of his mind for allowing his Christian faith to shape his views on human rights. Has Brownback imposed his beliefs on others? No, but he has allowed it to influence the way he acts and makes decisions.

It is hard to comprehend why so many people chastise Brownback, when he is fighting so hard for what is right not only in this nation, but also in places desperately in need of the help of a country that has much to offer. The fact Brownback has decided to possibly pursue a nomination for the presidency shows his commitment to this country, the same country that has painted him as a vile, Bible-thumping senator.

From what I've seen in the media, there are no good reasons to oppose Brownback. Just because a candidate prays and believes in God doesn't mean I'm not going to support him or her.

Does this guy have a chance? For the sake of our country, I sure hope so.

Chuck Armstrong is pursuing a bachelor's degree in becoming smarter than you, idiot. Please send your unintelligent rants and ravings to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

TO THE POINT

An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Senator, governor can better state's image

In an episode of "Family Guy," Peter explains evolution, but then he says he is "obligated by the state of Kansas to present the church's alternative."

At this point, a genie struts out and makes living objects appear from thin air.

Even "The Daily Show with Jon Stewart" reported after the midterm elections that Kansas burned a witch as part of a referendum.

These highlight some of the negative stereotypes other parts of the country associate with Kansas, especially after controversial decisions by the state board of education.

However, two Kansas politicians are doing their part to disprove these ideas of Kansas: Sen. Sam Brownback and Gov. Kathleen Sebelius.

In Brownback, a staunchly conservative Republican and a possible 2008 presidential candidate, others finally have a chance to see Kansas isn't the backwoods state some think it is. A strong supporter of human rights and American families, Brownback shows the nation that though Kansas is a red state, it is still reasonable.

With Sebelius' election as the new chairperson of the Democratic Governors Association, her name brings more recognition than any Kansas governor since Alf Landon. Sebelius is a moderate and a Democrat, which is an excellent balance to Brownback's right-leaning ideology.

Agree or disagree with their politics, Brownback and Sebelius are highly respected by peers and voters.

We hope they use their good fortune to erase some of the stigma Kansas has received. Then maybe the rest of the country will see we have joined the 21st century.

Hey, Cedrique, last I checked you were an amateur sports writer, not a basketball coach. Leave Bob Huggins alone.

Cedrique, what was the last year you coached a team in the NCAA tournament? Oh, is that right? OK.

So, yeah.

No, really — so, yeah.

No, no, really. The Collegian would be a lot better if they had a lot more yeah. So, yeah.

TO THE EDITOR

'This Week...' feature misses today's anniversary of Pearl Harbor; citizens must not forget history

'Scooter Girl' could refer to multiple students; comic strip doesn't offend, but entertains

Editor,

I am writing to express my opinion on the Dec. 4 issue of the Collegian. In the Edge section, you had a "This Week..." segment that recapped some of the historical events and other bizarre holidays that occurred this week in history.

I was impressed that you added on Wednesday, the Washington Monument was finished in 1884. I did not know that. Nor did I know that Thursday was U.S. Cotton Candy Day.

Wait a minute. Did anything else of historical value happen on Dec. 7? Like around 1941?

Dec. 7, 1941, was the day Pearl Harbor was attacked by Japan. The start of WWII for the Americans and the birth of the Greatest Generation. Maybe you just forgot or did not know. But please, please tell me that is more important than declaring Dec. 7 as Cotton Candy Day.

This is important to me, because upon graduation from K-State, I plan on going into one of the armed forces of the United States. The reason why this matters to me is because I love our American history. I believe that too many news outlets forget, truly forget, the reason(s) we are still a country and what has made America so great. It has been said and harped on so much that "we cannot forget."

Well, we can't forget our history. Because if I forget, then I have no reason to remember what our armed forces have done for us.

If I forget, then I have forgotten my motivation to join.

SENIOR IN SOCIOLOGY/CRIMINOLOGY

Editor,

I am writing in response to the letter to the editor by Tifani Bahr, which was printed Dec. 5 and regarded a comic strip produced by Jess Boatwright about "Scooter Girl" printed Nov. 29.

"Scooter Girl" is a title. I have seen at least three different students who ride scooters around campus, any of which could potentially and probably at one point or another have held the title of "Scooter Girl."

Was Jess Boatwright making fun of all three of these girls?

Did you see their actual names listed in the comic strip?

No. Jess Boatwright produced a comic strip that touched on the title "Scooter Girl." It was not rude or mocking of the actual person(s), and it did stimulate humor for quite a few people. No comic strip touches everyone as being funny, but then we all have a different sense of humor, so they shouldn't.

"Scooter Girl" appropriately brings to mind a girl who rides her scooter around campus. I do not picture one particular individual when I hear "Scooter Girl," but rather the idea of one.

The comic strip was not a personal attack, but rather touched on this idea of "Scooter Girl" in a well-done manner.

Thank you, Jess Boatwright, for showing us a student can create good and creative comic strips.

I look forward to seeing more of your work in the Collegian!

Students must embrace differences to consider K-State inclusive

Editor,

I am writing this letter in regards to a letter that was in the Dec. 5 newspaper. Tifani Bahr wrote a letter to the editor claiming Jess Boatwright went too far when making fun of "Scooter Girl." She then continued to talk about how gay people are not doing anything worse than "Scooter Girl" is.

What does being gay have to do with anything? Why do we as a society have to bring up our differences all the time? Is there really any difference between a straight person and a gay person? We all put on our pants one leg at a time.

People should be able to get along and not have to point out our differences. If we are going to promote ourselves as an inclusive campus to people of all races, genders and sexual orientations, then we need to not point out each other's differences but embrace our differences and work together. We are all Wildcats, and that is all that should matter.

Find time to relax for health

It's the end of the semester, and that means most students are scrambling to earn those last couple points to save their grades. Hale Library mysteriously has become Manhattan's new social hotspot, and the nightlife there is second to none.

TRENT SCOTT

How do I know? I live there, too, just like the 3,000 other students who have been too busy this semester to prevent their biannual procrastination.

But what can students like us do to stop ourselves from going crazy?

I am going to assume everyone is taking several hours out of the week to exercise, so I'll get off that horse. However, sometimes, especially during these last weeks of the semester, we all need to leave the library and relax.

Here are a few ideas that will ease your mind without taking up too much of your precious time.

CATCH A FLICK

Whatever your preference, watching a movie is a great way to forget about the woes of school for a couple hours. Stop by the local movie rental on your way home from studying, or if you just can't tear yourself away from campus, the K-State Student Union shows a movie every Friday, Saturday and Sunday evening for only a couple of dollars.

GO ON A DATE

Do yourself and your sweetheart a favor and enjoy a little time away from school together. Visit City Park and go ice skating. Or if you're really handy and have the means, clean out that neglected fireplace and show off your inner Boy Scout by starting a cozy fire and warm up together after a long day.

What if you don't have a significant other? Take a break and start up a conversation with that cute girl you've been eyeing over by the computers.

GRAB A DRINK

There's no shame in having a glass of red wine or a beer after a long day spent buried in your calculus book. What's more, according to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism of the National Institutes of Health, studies have shown moderate alcohol consumption — moderate is the key word — can result in a decreased risk for coronary heart disease. Just be sure to enjoy that brew responsibly.

Less stress

Illustrations by Donald Lee | COLLEGE

Creative forms of exercise relieve pre-finals anxiety

You feel your muscles begin to tighten as your mind races with thoughts of final exams to study for, projects to finish, end-of-semester presentations to give, and multi-page papers to hand in.

You're stressing out. The only way to fight the feeling is to get your mind off the stressor.

You need to move.

You need to hit something and yell. I suggest physical activity.

I don't mean your standard 30 minutes on a cardiovascular machine or a casual outdoor jog. It's time you get creative and take out that stress in your workout.

If you're looking to hit something, try playing a team sport like volleyball, racquetball or even dodgeball. These are great ways to release all that aggression.

In team sports you'll have reassuring teammates to boost your confidence, and you can yell when your team doesn't do something perfectly.

If team sports are not your forte, do a cardio workout to lose all sense of time and problems. Try peddling out the stress while on a bike, or jog/walk for miles. Increase your intensity as stressful thoughts recur.

Or travel the mind/body route to decrease stress levels. Both yoga and Pilates classes offer soothing music and words to accompany challenging body positions. These positions require concentration, removing your thoughts from your hectic life.

Probably the easiest way to a carefree state is to dance.

This can be done at home, in the car, with friends, in an aerobics class or on the dance floor.

Getting down with friends requires little to no rhythm. These goofy movements might spark laughter, another great way to reduce stress. Laughter is contagious, so invite your stressed buddies to a clear-your-head-for-finals dance party.

Indoor track season begins with All-Comers Meet

File photo

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

The K-State indoor track season begins this Friday and Saturday when the Wildcats play host to the Carol Robinson Winter Pentathlon and the KSU All-Comers Meet in Ahearn Field House.

Last season the team saw mixed results.

"We were a stronger national team than conference team," coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Though the whole team might not have been as strong as it could have been, there are several talented individuals, said Kaylene Wagner, captain of the K-State women's track and field team.

"We don't have the numbers, but we have really good individuals," she said.

Last season the Wildcats had a number of field athletes place at the NCAA indoor track and field championships.

Among them were senior Kyle Lancaster, who placed second overall in the men's high jump; freshman Scott Sellers, who placed ninth in the high jump; and Breanna Eveland, who placed third in the women's pole vault.

Several team members also placed at the 2006 NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

Junior Candice Mills placed fourth in the women's long jump, Sellers placed third in the men's high jump, and Eveland placed 13th in the women's pole vault.

"We actually had athletes place as high or higher at nationals than they did in the Big 12 (Conference)," Rovelto said. "The Big 12 was the strongest (conference) in the country."

In fact, the Big 12 could be even stronger this year, which might mean another season in which the Wildcats do better at the national championships than within the Big 12, Rovelto said.

"I have high hopes for this year," Wagner said. "We have a bunch of young people that are getting better," said Lancaster, captain of the men's track and field team.

Among the most promising are several international athletes.

British high jumper Anthony Mattis, Hungarian high jumper Oliver Harsanyi, and Puerto Rican distance runner Liliani Mendez all are recent additions to the team who show a lot of potential, Rovelto said.

"There aren't many international athletes, but they tend to stick out because they're good athletes," he said.

Additionally, several local team members hope to travel to the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing. Lancaster said he, Wagner and Sellers all have plans to try out for the Olympic team when the trials begin on June 27 at Oregon's Hayward Field in Eugene, Ore.

Staff Reports

FBC | Prince, players to sign autographs Sunday in Bramlage

The K-State football program will have a fan appreciation autograph session on Dec. 10 to celebrate its upcoming appearance in the inaugural Texas Bowl against No. 16 Rutgers.

The autograph session will be 4-5:30 p.m. on the concourse in Bramlage Coliseum, with coach Ron Prince and players.

The Wildcats will face the Scarlet Knights at Reliant Stadium on Dec. 28, in Houston, Texas. Kickoff is scheduled for 7 p.m., and the game will be televised nationally by NFL Network.

A limited number of tickets in the K-State block remain available for purchase through the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics ticket office.

FBC | Texas Bowl parking passes available for pre-purchase

K-State football fans driving to the Texas Bowl can pre-purchase parking for the game through the K-State Athletics Ticket Office.

Cost for parking is $20 at Houston's Reliant Stadium, site of the Dec. 28 matchup between the Wildcats and No. 16 Rutgers.

The easiest way to purchase parking passes is online at www.k-statesports.com, clicking on the bowl information tab and selecting one of the ticket order options. Fans also can order in person at the ticket office in Bramlage Coliseum or by calling 1 (800) 221-CATS. Parking passes will be mailed with ticket orders.

Tickets are available through K-State in the stadium's lower level at $25, $35, $50 and $75, and in the Club level for $50 or $75.

VOL | K-State adds outside hitter as 1st addition to 2007 roster

K-State volleyball coach Suzie Fritz announced the signing of JuliAnne Chisholm of Hillsboro to a National Letter of Intent on Wednesday. Chisholm is the first addition to K-State's 2007 roster.

Chisholm, a 5-foot-10 outside hitter from Hillsboro High School, is a 2006 Class 3A State All-Tournament Team selection and earned her third-straight unanimous selection to the All-Mid-Central Activities Association first team. She also garnered first-team All-Class 3A honors and the MVP award from the Hutchinson News, as well as first-team All-Class from the publication.

Chisholm finished the 2006 season with 381 kills on a .448 hitting percentage, 242 digs, 126 total blocks and 40 service aces in 38 matches and 80 games played. Chisholm registered a personal season-high of 21 kills and 19 digs against Canton-Galva on Sept. 30.

Chisholm also was a four-year letter-winner in basketball and track at Hillsboro. She holds the school records in the high jump (5-09.00), the 100-meter hurdles (14.77), 300-meter hurdles (45.93) and 1,600-meter run (5:34.60).

FBN | Chiefs linebacker Johnson returns to practice; Turley injured

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Linebacker Derrick Johnson returned to practice for the Kansas City Chiefs on Wednesday, but right tackle Kyle Turley went out with a shoulder injury.

Coach Herm Edwards said Turley was injured during practice and would undergo an MRI.

John Welbourn probably will start at right tackle if Turley is unavailable for Sunday's game against Baltimore. Welbourn started nine games at right tackle last year but has played little since being suspended the first six games of the season for violation of the league's substance abuse rules.

The Chiefs listed three starters as questionable for Sunday. Defensive lineman Jimmy Wilkerson sat out with a hamstring injury, safety Sammy Knight was nursing a sore ankle, and defensive tackle James Reed "did very little" after missing last week's game with a hamstring injury, Edwards said.

Online class enrollment increases

By Dustin Sanborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is a definite trend in the direction of online classes, a dean for the Division of Continuing Education said.

Many students find they have obligations that don't allow them to attend classes at the university, so they take online and distance education courses, said David Stewart, assistant dean for program development and marketing in the Division of Continuing Education.

"It is sometimes easier to work with online classes with regards to work schedules or if a class on campus has filled up," Stewart said.

More than 85 percent of total student population is nontraditional, Stewart said. The number of people taking online courses is increasing about 8-12 percent per year.

The number of online courses offered also is growing each year as well as the degree and certificate programs, according to K-State's Web site.

K-State offers six bachelor degree programs online. Schooling offered online covers the last two years of the program because first two usually are taken at a community college. Sixteen master's degree programs are available, and 16 certificate programs available, Stewart said.

A certificate program is a popular way to step into a program that, when completed, indicates students have successfully achieved that much, he said.

Students enrolled in online classes from K-State come from all 50 U.S. states and 16 other countries, Stewart said.

"We're hoping to continue to expand outreach into international community," he said.

Stewart said online classes probably will not influence on-campus attendance at K-State, but they do extend university resources to a wider student community. Online classes also enhance classes on campus with improvements in technology.

However, students must be self-motivated to take distance education courses.

"Self-discipline is very important, since a teacher is not there to tell you to get something done," Katie Scanlon, junior in pre-nursing, said. "Responsibility is more on the student."

Online classes might differ in cost, depending on which classes are taken. Basic fees are added to tuition to fund the support services required for distance learning, so costs generally are higher.

However, if a student weighs the cost of moving to Manhattan and possibly quitting a job, enrolling in online classes could be a better alternative. The total cost can be more economical depending on the circumstances, Stewart said.

"It was cost effective for me to take the class online because I was living in Kansas City, (Kan.), and I wanted to graduate early," Scanlon said.

Some of the more expensive courses can cost $100-$150 more than on-campus classes, Stewart said.

"Some classes don't need some of the online services others need," he said. "If the service is not provided, the tuition is not raised."

Usually, the quality of the class remains high even if it is taken online.

"My professor posted the lectures online, so I felt like I received the same material just as well over the Internet," Scanlon said.

According to an article on CNN.com, professors are becoming more comfortable with online learning. Sixty-two percent of academic officers said they thought students learned just as well or better from online courses.

CONGO INAUGURATES JOSEPH KABILA AS FREELY CHOSEN LEADER

KINSHASA, Congo — After decades of dictatorship and wars, Congo on Wednesday swore in its first freely elected president since 1960, installing the son of a rebel leader who promised a new era of order and better days ahead.

"This moment marks the beginning of a new era that must bring well-being and development to Congo's people," Joseph Kabila said at his inauguration ceremony outside the presidential palace. "I see a Congo where the people are always able to work."

Kabila, declared the winner of an October presidential run-off vote, took his oath after a series of prayers from different faiths — including Muslim, Christian and the indigenous Kimbanguist Church. Thousands of onlookers shaded themselves from the sun under umbrellas in the national colors of blue, red and yellow.

Though he has been accused of continuing a trend of corruption and ignoring abuses by his army, Kabila, 35, is widely praised for ushering in a peace plan that ended 1998-2002 wars that drew in the armies of at least six countries and creating a unity government that organized the central African country's first multiparty elections in more than four decades.

AUSTRALIA LIFTS BAN ON CLONING EMBRYOS FOR RESEARCH

CANBERRA, Australia — Lawmakers rejected the moral views of their political leaders Wednesday and lifted a four-year ban on cloning human embryos for stem-cell research — legislation that could put Australia at the forefront of research into diseases like diabetes and Alzheimer's.

Prime Minister John Howard, his two deputies and the leader of the major opposition party all argued the sanctity of human life must take precedence over potential cures for conditions that also include Parkinson's disease, spinal cord injuries and arthritis.

But lawmakers in the House of Representatives took advantage of a rare non-party-line vote Wednesday to side with medical researchers, voting 82 to 62 to scrap the ban. The bill was passed by the Senate last month by a razor-edge 34 to 32.

The new law allows therapeutic cloning, the splicing of DNA from skin cells into eggs to produce stem cells, also known as master cells, which are capable of forming all the tissues of the human body. The cloned embryos cannot be implanted in a womb and must be destroyed within 14 days.

Police to up manpower during holidays

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Get in too much of a hurry this holiday season and the twinkling Christmas lights might have competition from the flashing lights of your neighborhood police car.

With increased holiday traffic from shopping expeditions, family ventures and vacation road trips, Kansas' law enforcement officers are gearing up to meet the increased demands of busier roadways and — if necessary — present drivers with a little stocking-grade coal in the form of a citation.

According to Kansas Department of Transportation records, the number of traffic accidents in December 2005 was the second highest for any month with 6,280. It avoided first place by 65 accidents.

The KDOT's report also noted four fatal accidents in Dec. 23-26, 2005. From Dec. 30, 2004 to Jan. 2, 2005, it reported eight fatal accidents — almost three times more than non-holiday figures for an equivalent four-day period.

To keep highway traffic moving smoothly, state and local officials are increasing manpower to respond to emergencies, running saturation patrols and writing tickets.

"It's fairly typical that we put extra officers out," said John Doehling of the Riley County Police Department.

Doehling said, especially around New Year's Eve, those traveling for parties should book hotel rooms or stay with friends or family.

For the K-State Police, the slower pace and lower enrollment of the winter intercession provides a much-needed break between the football and basketball season rushes, said Major Troy Lane, assistant director of the campus police.

But for New Year's, Lane said the campus police will field as many officers as possible, mostly around the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, where many people park before heading to Aggieville festivities, and will be ready to assist other law enforcement agencies in the area.

"We'll be right out there with them, backing them up if they need it," he said.

But high publicity of New Year's saturation patrols and drunk driving arrests have brought increased caution and planning to many potential partyers, J.L. Riedel, Kansas Highway Patrol trooper, said.

"We did excellent because of ... the media coverage. We're doing our jobs," Riedel said. "When it actually comes down to it, they're heeding the warning. They're planning ahead."

"We love to see a carload of intoxicated people with a sober driver," he said.

ABROAD | Students' tuition pays salaries for faculty-led programs

administration fee helps fund the office — a practice not uncommon in other universities.

"In public universities, study abroad tends to be a self-funding office, and what a university means by that is that they usually provide space," Jen Smith said.

The study abroad office collected a combined total of $119,950 in fees from students for spring, summer and fall 2006. Sharon Smith, accountant for the Office of International Programs, said these fees fund four unclassified positions, three advisers, a director and one classified position in the study abroad office. Office supplies also are included as well as copy machine rental, conferences for advisers, membership registrations, and travel to schools with whom the office is trying to build agreements, Sharon Smith said.

The administration fee dates back to the development of the study abroad office in the early 1990s, said Ken Holland, associate provost of international programs. At that time, the provost said the study abroad office should be self-supporting, similar to the one at the University of Kansas. The fee was set at $600 per semester — similar to KU's cost, he said. When Holland joined the K-State program in 2003, he lowered it to $450.

Holland said the decision to impose a fee is up to administration.

"As long as the university takes the position that the study abroad office has to be self-supported, we don't have the option to eliminate the fee," he said.

Other schools in the Big 12 Conference have similar administrative fees for study abroad.

KU has no application fee for students, but its office charges an administration fee of $300 per semester, said Susan Gronbeck-Tedesco, director of the office of study abroad at KU.

Administrative fees at KU are used to fund about 85 percent of the office's salaries and supplies, Gronbeck-Tedesco said. The university pays the director's salary.

At the University of Nebraska, there is no application fee, but its office charges an administration fee based on the type of program. Fees range from $150 for a summer up to $350 for a year, said Christa Joy, director of study abroad programs at Nebraska.

Like K-State, Nebraska uses this fee to help fund the office.

"It does go to staff costs," Joy said. "We are partially funded by tax dollars but mostly funded by revenue of study abroad fees."

FACULTY-LED PROGRAMS

Another issue that has caused concern for one K-State faculty member is how faculty members are paid for leading groups abroad. This concern came about last spring when Faculty Senate approved a change in how a faculty member is compensated.

When the new plan for faculty compensation was presented to Faculty Senate by the Office of the Provost, it was described as a way to allow faculty members to receive some kind of compensation for leading smaller groups abroad, said Robert Clark, associate professor of French.

"It was presented to us as something very favorable for faculty, and Faculty Senate supported it without really having seeing, I might add, exactly how this would all break down in terms of faculty salaries," said Clark, a Faculty Senate member.

Before the change, faculty members were paid for leading summer study abroad courses similar to the way they were paid for leading a summer school course — with one-ninth of their salary, Clark said. Now, a faculty member's salary is based on the number of students enrolled in the course.

"Before, I was expected to have maybe 10 or 12 students. Now I am expected to have 18 or 19," Clark said. "If I don't meet that minimum expectation, my salary is reduced by whatever percentage of income I fall short."

The plan was endorsed by Faculty Senate and applied almost immediately. The new method of compensation went into effect for professors who were to lead summer programs. But many professors, including Clark, already had signed agreements with the Office of International Programs with the understanding they would be paid for their summer programs under the previous plan.

Later, Clark found out he, too, would be compensated based on the new plan despite the circumstances under which he signed his contract. But it was too late to cancel the trip.

Compensation for K-State's faculty-led programs has changed more than once in the last few years.

When Holland arrived at K-State in 2003, he said faculty members were paid $100 per student by the Division of Continuing Education.

Holland wanted to follow more of a summer school model in which a faculty member is paid one-ninth of his or her salary. The money for the salary would come from tuition. If faculty members recruited enough students, they could make their normal salaries.

In 2006, the contract Holland developed went to Faculty Senate, and now the new system is in place, Holland said.

Because the study abroad office is self-funded, students' tuition goes directly to pay the faculty member's salaries for faculty-led programs, Holland said.

However, some other Big 12 schools do not pass on the cost of faculty members' salaries to students.

KU pays faculty members through their academic unit, and they request summer funding through the college, Gronbeck-Tedesco said. Faculty members typically are paid according to the program's length.

At Nebraska, faculty members are paid based on their normal salary and make the same amount of money they would make if they were teaching at the university, Joy said.

OFFICE HELP

The study abroad office currently is short an adviser and a director, which has made it harder on the two advisers in the office, Holland said.

On top of her duties as coordinator for faculty-led group programs, Jen Smith helps advise students in the Colleges of Agriculture and Education. The other adviser is Jenifer Chambers, who is in charge of advising students from all other colleges.

Last spring, Chambers was the director of the study abroad office, and she was reassigned after an administrative review, Holland said. These reviews include input from students, faculty members and administrators.

Holland said the reasons for the reassignment are confidential. However, he said he recommended the decision.

Two advisers also left the office after the Chambers' demotion, including Carolyn Comiskey, who is now the class dean of the Junior-Senior Advising Center at Columbia University.

Comiskey said she began looking for a new opportunity before Chambers' demotion. However, office tension did factor into her decision to leave.

Comiskey said Chambers' demotion was undeserved.

"I feel that the demotion of Jenifer Chambers was both unfair and bad for K-State students," Comiskey said. "The study abroad office wasn't perfect, but Jenifer made great improvements from what it had been previously."

Jen Smith said balancing the work between two people is difficult but doable.

"It's been busy, but actually the students are a priority," she said. "We are going to have someone hopefully in a couple of weeks."

Last year, 604 K-State students studied abroad through the study abroad office, Holland said. This represents 17.5 percent of this year's graduating class. Holland said the number is calculated by the percentage of students who graduate in a given year because the same students don't study abroad every year.

K-State President Jon Wehald has said he wants to have 10 percent of students at any given year studying abroad, Charles Reagan, associate to the president, said. Reagan said there are about 18,000 undergraduate students, so by this calculation, K-State had about 3.3 percent of students study abroad last year.

Last year, 1,331 KU students studied abroad through KU programs. The KU office has eight full-time advisers and four student peer advisers, Gronbeck-Tedesco said. About 26 percent of KU students study abroad, and Gronbeck-Tedesco said the goal is 50 percent.

Nebraska also is experiencing a staff shortage, Joy said. Two professional study abroad advisers are in charge of advising all students who wish to study abroad. Between fall 2005 and summer 2006, about 700 students studied abroad through Nebraska.

Chambers said the K-State office is searching for a new adviser and a new director. She said it has been a challenge to balance everything between two advisers.

"Since we are shorthanded, it's really hard for us to do everything in a timely manner," she said. "I hope students are not feeling that we're neglecting them, but I don't feel like I'm doing the kind of service that I would be able to do if there was a full staff."

Research, choices begin application

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students who are interested in studying abroad first must decide which semester they would like to go abroad. It is best to look at the options available at the beginning of the semester before the student will study abroad, according to the Office of International Programs' Web site, www.k-state.edu/oip/students/steps.htm. This Web site offers several tips on the steps that should be followed to study abroad.

■ The first step listed on the site is to go to a study abroad information session. These sessions teach students about the options they have when choosing a program. A student must attend one of these sessions before meeting with a study abroad adviser.

■ Next, the office recommends students do a self-evaluation and choose what kind of language they want to learn. According to the site, this is a time for reflection into how far a student is willing to step outside his or her comfort zone. When choosing a language, students must decide if they want to learn a new language, improve on a language they know or study in English. This is also the stage for students to decide how much money they want to spend on a program.

■ Now it is time for the student to meet with a study abroad adviser. Jen Smith is the adviser for students interested in National Student Exchange, faculty-led programs and students in the Colleges of Agriculture and Education. Jenifer Chambers is the adviser for the other colleges.

■ After speaking with an adviser, students should begin fine-tuning their plans. According to the Web site, students should further research their options, contact their academic advisers to make sure credits will transfer properly, get their passports, look into financing their programs, and turn in a study abroad application form. This form is due March 16 for summer or fall programs and Oct. 1 for spring programs. Faculty-led programs might have an earlier deadline. Applications are not accepted before the beginning of the semester. There is a $50 application fee to study abroad at K-State as well as a $450 administrative fee.

■ Next, students must attend a required orientation session. These sessions at the end of the semester will discuss cultural adaptation, health and safety issues, study abroad insurance and other information, according to the study abroad office.

■ Then students should make travel plans, book an appointment with a doctor to make sure they have their immunizations for the country to which they are traveling, enroll in study abroad on KATS, get a visa and prepare for departure. When students are abroad, they will need to e-mail their academic advisers to enroll for the next semester.

Dixie Chicks' documentary recounts aftermath of negative statements

"Shut Up and Sing"

Grade: A

Move review by Eileen Laux

Three years ago, the lead singer of the Dixie Chicks, Natalie Maines, spoke her mind at a London concert.

Few can forget what soon followed the comment, "Just so you know, we're ashamed the president of the United States is from Texas."

The documentary, "Shut Up and Sing," chronicles what Maines and bandmates Martie Maguire and Emily Robison went through personally and professionally in the aftermath of the comment. With footage of fans bulldozing and stomping on their compact discs, we get an inside look at what happened behind closed doors.

Those 12 words Maines said turned her world upside down.

Beginning in the studio, we see the band trying to overcome the fallout with its new album, "Taking the Long Way." Then we cut back to the night, on the eve of the Iraq War, on which Maines made the comment. She laughs as she says the joke and moves on to the next song as the crowd cheers. We also see the group after the show, and no one really says anything about it. Next is the footage of the media reports and the hope that this will all blow over; unfortunately, no one knew it still would sting for former fans three years later.

Throughout the film, we see the personal lives of the Chicks and Maines' unwillingness to back down. Several issues arise out of the controversy, including footage of the manager, Simon Renshaw, at Congress discussing the radio station blacklisting around the country.

For those who don't remember, there was no "official" boycott of the group's music, but radio stations wouldn't fulfill listeners' requests, which sounds like a boycott to me. It all goes back to the large corporations that control the radio stations. Several radio stations said it would be financial suicide to play the music.

The film takes a serious and almost scary turn as the Chicks tour and head to Dallas. Cut to Maines reading a paper that says she will be shot dead in Dallas on July 6. It is said throughout the film the band just couldn't understand how someone could hate them so much they want to take a life. Instead of canceling, the band bumps up security, and Maines sings her heart out on stage, refusing once again to back down.

Also on the surface is the new genre the Chicks face. Is the band rock, pop or country? However, Robison sees it as a reinvention and said it is a good thing the Chicks appeal to a new set of fans, because the women had a hit album once again in 2006 without the help of radio stations or old fans.

With all the backlash, the biggest issue of "Shut Up and Sing" is free speech. True, Maines is in the public eye, so what she says is subject to more scrutiny. However, all Americans, of whatever profession, have the right to say what they want to say. Through montages of fans picketing the shows and stating that if "you support the Dixie Chicks you're supporting traitors," and "freedom of speech is fine as long as you don't do it mass publicly," one can see that many people have a skewed outlook on what freedom of speech really is.

The film definitely is recommended to people who might support the Dixie Chicks, and it shows the courage and bravery of three women who still refuse to shut up and just sing.

'The Break-Up' co-stars Aniston and Vaughn do just that

Staff Reports
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) — Representatives for Jennifer Aniston and Vince Vaughn have confirmed the Hollywood couple has called it quits, People magazine reported on its Web site.

"Jennifer and Vince mutually agreed to end their relationship but continue to be good friends today," said representatives Stephen Huvane and John Pisani, according to People.com, in a story posted Tuesday.

Their representatives said the former co-stars decided to end their romance after Aniston visited Vaughn in London in October.

Aniston, 37, and Vaughn, 36, spent much of the last year and a half battling rumors about their relationship — first that it was starting, then that it was headed toward marriage, and most recently that it was sputtering.

The actors met while filming "The Break-Up" in 2005. Reports of a romance quickly swirled, but the two initially said they were simply friends.

They were spotted together in various places in the ensuing months but said little about their liaison. Still, by this summer, they were denying whispers of an engagement.

Within months, they were denying they were breaking up. In October, Vaughn threatened to sue British and American tabloid newspapers that had reported he was breaking it off with Aniston and had been seen kissing someone else.

Vaughn, now filming a holiday comedy called "Fred Claus," is known for his roles in comic films like "Wedding Crashers" and "Starsky & Hutch." Aniston, who is divorced from Brad Pitt, came to fame in the television comedy "Friends" and has gone on to star in a string of feature films.

HOROSCOPES

Your horoscope digest for today:

Sagittarius

(Nov. 22 - Dec. 21) Lunchtime shopping might be better saved for another time! Take your lunch hour to relax and plan. Taking charge and being in control become more important for you. You want to get things organized, and you have the initiative to do it.

Capricorn

(Dec. 22 - Jan. 19) There is a need for focus and careful analysis in many areas of your life. The work you do and the ways in which you take care of your health are important keys to reaching your potential.

Aquarius

(Jan. 20 - Feb. 18) You are to be praised for the emotional control you have today. There could be quite a lot of stress associated with the amount of work you feel you must accomplish.

Pisces

(Feb. 19 - March 20) Oh, you are fun today! You have discovered a secret, and this secret might make you like the Cheshire cat, hiding in the tree, waiting. Important issues concern public credibility, corporate ethics or some sensitive information.

Aries

(March 21 - April 19) At times you might have exciting and unexpected financial gains and losses — this might be another time for some gain, but there is a temptation to gamble. If you really want to invest, try the service industries.

Taurus

(April 20 - May 20) Problem-solving situations should be easy to complete. Your mental sharpness is fine-tuned. You have a lot of energy to pour into practical and career decisions. You could feel great support from those around you.

Gemini

(May 21 - June 21) You might have to work extra hard to get someone to listen to what you are saying. Don't take it too personally — it just seems to be something in the air this morning.

Cancer

(June 22 - July 22) You could talk anyone into just about anything today, and that is what you might be asked to do before a meeting begins this morning.

Leo

(July 23 - Aug. 22) Professional responsibilities might include your ability to analyze or anticipate the needs and requirements of others. You might have to think ahead all the time, which causes much stress.

Virgo

(Aug. 23 - Sept. 22) Juggling your professional and personal responsibilities has been a bit of a struggle. Today, you should see the energies move steadily in a professional direction.

Libra

(Sept. 23 - Oct. 23) You might find someone changing times and dates of appointments and barely transferring that message to you. There could be a feeling of sabotage, but this is just a busy person so easy does it.

Scorpio

(Oct. 24 - Nov. 21) This is a lucky day for making plans or decisions and finding your way through just about any problem you might discover.

Online resources assist job seekers

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As graduation nears, students begin to look for ways to find the best job in the least amount of time.

The Internet offers a variety of resources available to the job seeker in just a few clicks. Here are a few Web sites helping people find their dream jobs.

CAREERBUILDER.COM

CareerBuilder.com allows users to search for jobs or receive recommendations from the site's Job Recommendation Engine. The engine remembers previous searches, scans a résumé and relays possible matches.

The site also provides job search tools and résumé posting. Job seekers can join the My Career Builder option to receive a newsletter and e-mails with job information.

Laura Morsch, career adviser, said CareerBuilder.com sets itself apart with its technology, both with its flagship site and college-featured site, CBcampus.com. Morsch said CareerBuilder.com also has the most job postings in the industry, with more than 1.5 million.

While it's hard to determine the success rate of the site, Morsch said she has seen signs the site is working well.

"Employers are posting more and more of their jobs on our site, and we're seeing strong growth in the number of job seekers visiting our site," she said.

MONSTER.COM

Monster.com says job seekers can "Double your chances of getting a job" on its home page. The site goes on to state, if people post their résumés on the Internet, they will double their chances of getting an interview and job, according to custom research from site users.

Through this free service, e-mails are sent notifying users of a possible job match for their résumé. The site also offers advice and information on credit, insurance and taxes.

A special feature, Career Advice, allows users to receive information about how to get the jobs they want.

JOBWEB.COM

JobWeb.com provides career and job information for college students and recent college graduates. The site is owned and sponsored by the National Association of Colleges and Employers.

The site allows job seekers to view a list of employers along with a description of the organization. Employers also are encouraged to post job offers and organizational information for potential employees.

COLLEGEGRAD.COM

CollegeGrad.com provides free career tools as well as job-seeker tools and resources.

A salary wizard helps users find a range of salaries available in their field of interest. The cost-of-living wizard is a feature provided by the site for those wanting to compare the cost of living and salary in different parts of the country.

Heidi Hanisko, director of client services for CollegeGrad.com, said the site offers jobs targeted to entry-level candidates. Hanisko said users can find information specific to their job search.

A strong area of the site, Hanisko said, is the résumé templates for several different fields. Frequently asked questions and blogging also are popular features of the site.

THELADDERS.COM

More than 30,000 people become employed each month through TheLadders.com, according to the organization's Web site.

This site states it is one of the most comprehensive sources for jobs starting at a salary of $100,000. It helps users find executive-level employment in a number of fields.

A free basic view is offered, but a $30 monthly subscription is required.

Number of grads in debt stays same

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than half of K-State students enrolled in the 2006-07 academic year have financial aid debt.

Student Financial Assistance gathered these findings within the last year, and the percentage of students with financial aid debt has remained consistent in the past several years, said Larry Moeder, director of Admissions and Student Financial Assistance.

K-State students are not alone. A USA TODAY and the National Endowment for Financial Education survey found 60 percent of Americans in their 20s think they are facing tougher financial pressures than young people in previous generations, according to a Nov. 20 USA TODAY report.

The report also stated that about half of those in their 20s have finished paying a debt. However, after graduation, options exist to help pay off debts and avoid future ones from credit cards.

PAYING OFF FINANCIAL AID LOANS

Moeder said he encourages students to gather information about their student loans and consolidation possibilities as soon as possible.

"One of the things that I advise students to do is to check into loan repayments immediately after graduation so they don't allow their loans to go into default status," he said.

About 95 percent of K-State students who borrow money for college have their loans serviced by Sallie Mae, Moeder said. Sallie Mae is the nation's leading provider of student loans and administrator of college savings plans, according to its Web site.

Judy Bonjour, assistant vice president of student loans at Kansas State Bank, said students can view their loan status under the "managing loans" section of Sallie Mae's Web site.

Through consolidation plans, students often can find options for lower interest rates, Moeder said.

"There are also reductions in interest rates for students who make a designated consecutive number of payments on time, and they can vary from servicer to servicer," he said.

Moeder said he urges students to use caution when selecting a consolidation plan since many new companies exist. Students should look at companies that have existed for a long time, he said.

CREDIT CARD DEBT

In addition to financial aid debt, some college students also face debt from credit cards. More than 70 percent of college students have at least one credit card, according to Experience, Inc.'s 2006 College Life - Finances and Banking survey.

"Although credit cards are easy to get and easy to use, the ramifications can be negative for college students after they graduate," said John Grable, associate professor of family studies and human services. "Some students are going to have a hard time paying off that credit card debt."

Increased credit card debt among college students across the country could be attributed to increased tuition costs, said Grable, whose areas of specialization include financial planning practice management.

But Experience, Inc.'s survey reports 41 percent of college students use credit cards to purchase basic necessities.

"One of the reasons that credit card debt is increasing is because they are used as a bridge between the cost-of-living that financial aid did not account for," Grable said.

While K-State's tuition has increased in the last several years, Moeder said the university has continued to increase its financial assistance to keep pace. Nationally, however, financial aid has not increased, he said.

"The problem has been at the national level," Moeder said. "The Federal Pell Grant, which is available for students with high financial need, has not increased for at least the last four years."

From a financial planning point of view, Grable said students should use caution when applying for a credit card. Credit card debt also can affect one's job search after graduation, because many employers now perform credit checks on potential employees, he said.

"Most employers anticipate students to have some financial aid debt," Grable said. "What would trigger employers is if students had that debt in addition to credit card debt."

Good-bye, K-State

Illustration by Lacey Mackey | COLLEGIAN

Graduate-to-be learned a lot, but is ready to go

The time is finally here. After 4 1/2 years, I am graduating.

It's hard to believe I have made it to this point. The last nine semesters have passed in a purple-tinted blur.

While a part of me is happy to be starting the rest of my life, the other part is begging me to stay and go to graduate school, just so I can prolong the inevitable — getting a job and stepping fully into adulthood. Nonetheless, before I don a black cap and gown and walk across the stage, I feel the need to share a few of the things I learned in my tenure at K-State.

First, always screen your roommates. Trust me when I say you'll be happier if you do. From my freshman year until last semester I have been cursed with bad roommates. Don't get me wrong; they are not bad people — I am still friends with the majority of them — they just weren't good roommates. They all swore to me they were clean and could pick up after themselves, and like an idiot, I believed them. Fast forward to me cleaning up after them for the remainder of our lease.

My point is, make sure you know your future roommates well. Life together will be much more fun and relaxing if everyone knows what to expect of each other, and don't be afraid to yell at them when necessary. I promise you'll feel better.

KERRY FISCHER

Second, live close to campus. I have never lived within walking distance of campus and always regretted it. I seemed to go backwards, moving further away each year. You'd think I'd learn, but no — although it was nice living within walking distance of Snyder Family Stadium. Living close to campus saves money because you don't have to buy a parking permit. Plus, you don't have to go to Peters Recreation Complex all the time because you're getting a workout just by walking to and from campus each day.

Finally, attend sporting events. There is nothing better than sitting in the front row on the 50-yard line, while the Wildcats beat the Texas Longhorns, and being one of the first to rush the field. While that probably won't happen again anytime soon, the important thing is to be present, cheering on the team. Honestly, the best part of my 4 1/2 years here has been all of the football games I have attended. Sitting in the student section is like sitting around the television watching the game with family, even if the family is 5,000 strangers.

Now that I've passed on my pearls of wisdom, it's time to face reality. I've put graduation off as long as possible — I came back this semester to finish my Spanish minor and work as the managing editor of the Collegian, just to avoid getting a job.

I don't recommend returning when you have the chance to get out. While I'm grateful for the experience I have gained at the Collegian this semester, it also has made me realize that I am done with college. I don't want to be here anymore; I want to start my own life.

Thank you, K-State, for the best education I could possibly receive. My blood is purple, but it's time to go.

Some to celebrate graduation with parties at homes, bars

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Once the diplomas have been handed out and the caps and gowns have returned to the closet, some students will have graduation parties.

"It's been such a stressful week that everyone will be ready to have a good time," Kristen Wall, senior in marketing, said.

Graduation parties are a tradition of the K-State graduation weekend, as — according to party hosts — it allows friends and family an opportunity to celebrate a significant milestone.

"We've been in college for four and a half years now," Jenny Collins, senior in marketing, said. "I believe graduation is pretty significant and definitely calls for a party."

There are a variety of options when planning a graduation party. Restaurants and bars are popular venues that provide a good atmosphere and food selection.

"My family and I are having a graduation party at Paddy O'Quigley's Bar and Grill inside of the Clarion," said Jason Miller, senior in construction science and management. "Having a party at a restaurant is easy for everyone, including some people like grandparents who may have trouble at a house or apartment."

Other students decided to have their parties at a private residence on graduation Saturday. Collins and Wall said they plan to throw a joint graduation party with roommate Jessica Wintersteen.

"It's really expensive to rent out a bar. Plus, by the time we decided to throw the party, places were already reserved," Collins said. "It's a little homier and personal, which is good."

The soon-to-be graduates said one of the potential problems with the party scene on Saturday will be the numerous celebrations happening at the same time.

"There are quite a few parties happening at the same time," Wall said. "I feel bad that I'm not going to be able to attend all of them, but at the same time, I would feel really bad if I wasn't here for all of my guests."

"I'm sure the other graduates understand and are having the same problem."

Although the parties will be fun, some admit the night might become bittersweet.

"I think towards the end of the night it will be bittersweet," Collins said. "This may be the last time I see some of these people again, and I think there will be some sad feelings — probably not at first, but maybe after a few drinks."

Business, engineering salaries jump

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 2006 K-State graduates will have more than one reason to celebrate on graduation day.

Not only will they receive a diploma for their years of dedicated scholastic achievement, they also will enter the strongest job market of the last five years.

"Employers expected to face more competition for new college graduates this year, and that competition is translating into higher college salaries," said Camille Luckenbaugh, research director for the National Association of Colleges and Employers.

According to a survey conducted by NACE, the fields that have seen some of the biggest increases in average starting salaries are hospitality services management, business administration, management, accounting and economics.

"It's kind of exciting," Joe Sanders, senior in economics, said. "This solidifies that I made a good choice with my major."

Luckenbaugh said all business disciplines experienced starting salary growths from last year, possibly due to baby boomer retirement and subsequent job vacancies.

"Investment banks are a really good opportunity for this class," Luckenbaugh said. "This, combined with the high number of offers from financial service companies, has given graduates in the business fields more of a bargaining chip."

The engineering fields also saw an increase, though more moderate, in starting salaries.

According to NACE, chemical, mechanical, computer and electrical engineering accounted for four of the 10 careers in the highest demand.

"That's not surprising, given the demand we have seen from petroleum and coal products manufacturers," Luckenbaugh said.

These manufacturers also might be responsible for the higher demand for graduates in geology and related sciences, as their average starting salary saw a 12.3 percent jump to $44,000, Luckenbaugh said.

However, not all fields received the same increase in starting salaries. Among the liberal arts, results were mixed.

As a group, liberal arts majors posted just a 0.2 percent increase in the last year, according to NACE. However, individual majors saw more significant changes, both positive and negative.

History majors saw their average starting salary rise 3.1 percent to $32,697. On the contrary, English majors saw a 4.1 percent decrease in starting salary, dropping the average to just more than $30,000.

Business casual clothing should be worn under gown

Josslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Tips for her:

- Dresses, skirts or pant suits are appropriate for commencement.
- Dress or skirts should be shorter than the gown.
- Pant suits should match the color of the gown.
- Hosiery and shoes also should match the gown.
- Hair should be worn down or styled at the nape of the neck to ensure the cap will fit correctly.

Tips for him:

- Dress pants and button-down shirts are appropriate.
- Coordinating the color of the gown with pants and shoes is best.
- Black dress shoes are appropriate.

By Emily Haug

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Graduation weekend is here, and soon-to-be graduates are ironing their gowns and attaching tassels to their caps.

While the cap and gown are the most recognizable items associated with graduation, students must remember what they wear underneath is just as important.

Denise Dias of the American Sewing Guild said students should consider the length and color of the gowns when choosing an outfit.

"When considering what to wear on graduation day, students should focus on what will be seen from the knee down and also around the collar area," she said.

Graduates should dress in business casual for commencement, Dias said.

Business casual dress is the middle ground between business formal wear and street wear, according to www.diction-

[ary.com. Business casual can cause confusion, because it covers a broad area of clothing.](http://www.diction-
<div data-bbox=)

For men, Dias said dress pants and button-down shirts are appropriate. To coordinate with the black color of the gowns, a possible outfit combination could consist of black pants, socks and shoes. Continuing with the black theme can look better than wearing pants of a different color, like khaki, she said.

Jenny Brazzle, employee at the K-State Student Union Bookstore, said all the graduation gowns the store sells are black, except the velvet on doctorate candidates' gowns.

The attire for women should consist of dresses, skirts or pant suits, Dias said. If a woman wears a dress or skirt, the length should be slightly shorter than the gown so it is not visible. With dresses and skirts, women should wear dark-colored hose.

When wearing a pant suit,

Dias said a graduate should match the suit to the color of the gown and wear black socks and shoes.

Dias also said students should pay close attention to the shoes they plan to wear to the ceremony. Graduates should match their shoes to the gowns and not to the outfit they wear underneath. Because the ceremony is in December, women should wear closed-toed shoes, and men should wear dress shoes.

The attire worn during the ceremony is an important aspect of graduation day, and students should take time to choose an outfit carefully. Finding the perfect outfit can help make the day a success.

"It is a really special day, and the graduates should want to look their best," Dias said.

Work culture key in decision

By Eric Brown

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For soon-to-be-graduates still contemplating their future employment, Jennifer Camp, a college recruiter for Koch Industries, has some advice.

"I cannot stress enough finding a company culture that fits you," she said. "I know that there are numerous aspects to analyze when choosing an employer, but you must make sure you choose a company that you fit into and can be comfortable with."

Camp said Koch Industries in Wichita looks for a long-term commitment from future employees.

"We want to provide them with the experience and knowledge that they need in order to succeed in the long run," she said. "But if that person doesn't fit into the culture or atmosphere of our company, their progress will be hindered, which hurts both us and the person we've hired."

Melissa Spieckermann, who is one of 260 K-State alumni working at Koch Industries, also acknowledges the importance of culture in the work environment.

"I would suggest getting to know all of your potential employers as well as you possibly can before making your decision," said Spieckermann, a 2003 K-State graduate and a trade accountant for Koch Industries. "Any time there are company recruiting events or opportunities to socialize with other employees of the business, don't hesitate."

Spieckermann also is involved in the college recruiting process.

"A lot of times we attend campus career fairs, and a lot of people will briefly pass by to give us their résumés and information but won't attend our info sessions after the career fair," she said.

"That's disappointing, because not only does it prevent us from getting to know you, it prevents you from getting to know whether or not you might fit into our environment. You need to be around the people that you're considering working with."

Both Camp and Spieckermann also noted the emphasis on the culture of the workplace is a plus for K-State graduates.

"K-State graduates possess attributes that fit very well into most working-place cultures," Camp said. "K-State has a reputation for producing students who are grounded and hard-working and who are able to hit the ground running in a working environment."

One K-State alumna who has proven her ability to excel in a different work culture is Lynn Brickley. Brickley, a 2004 K-State graduate, is teaching English in Budapest, Hungary.

"I'm working in a completely different part of the world and in a completely different culture than what I was used to," Brickley said. "But I feel that I was given the ability at K-State to adjust very well to a variety of working environments."

Brinkley said the culture of the employer is important in making career choices.

"K-State does an excellent job of providing students with qualities that adapt well into many kinds of careers and working cultures," she said.

Graduates move back home to save money before finding employment

By Allison Voris

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After Saturday's commencement ceremonies and finals week, many graduates will begin a new phase of life — back at home.

Finishing college can bring new problems, including difficult job searches, high housing costs and debt from student loans.

For these reasons, two-thirds of college graduates will move back home after graduation, according to a survey conducted by CollegeGrad.com, the No. 1 entry-level job Web site.

"The reality of the cost of living on your own hits home pretty immediately," Brian Krueger, president of CollegeGrad.com, said in a news release.

"With college loans to pay off and little or no money in the bank, it can be especially difficult to make ends meet. Moving back home temporarily can help bridge the gap from college to independence."

Larry Moeder, director of Admissions and Student Financial Assistance, said the average K-State student who borrows money graduates with $18,000 in debt, which usually takes about 10 years to repay.

Rodney Elliott, 2002 graduate in agronomy, moved home after graduation.

"I moved back with my parents basically to get my feet back under me after all the expenses of living at college," he said.

"It was a really good opportunity to save money."

Many graduates will live at home for a short period of time until they find a roommate or employment.

Susie Hanefeld, senior in history, will fall into this category when she finishes college this fall. She found a job in Las Vegas but will not start until about a month after she graduates.

Before receiving a job offer, Hanefeld said she was worried about the cost of living on her own.

"It's always in the back of your mind," she said.

Though he agrees moving back home is a smart solution to some graduates' financial problems, Krueger said graduates should be careful not to make this a permanent move.

"If moving back home is the only or the best option, it should be a temporary one," he said. "Grads need to take that leap and learn responsibility — even if it's difficult at first."

Gifts from family, friends differ in expense, practicality

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As graduation approaches, many people will be deciding what gifts to give graduates.

There are several options, depending on how close one is to the graduate and how much one is willing to spend.

Some students said it is truly the thought that counts when receiving a gift from a fellow student.

Allison Ray, senior in management, will graduate this semester. She said if she receives a gift from a friend, she would want it to be more meaningful than expensive.

"The other day my roommate made me this card, and it had some of our favorite memories. I really liked that," she said. "However, my extended family is sending me money for all the things that I need for my new apartment, which is what I prefer."

Ray said besides money, items for her apartment and gift cards are second and third on her list, respectively. She also said graduation and Christmas gifts shouldn't be combined.

Emily Davis, 2005 K-State graduate and resident of Round Rock, Texas, said she followed a different path when requesting gifts.

"I told people who asked me what I wanted for graduation that I wanted nothing but gift cards," she said. "I thought that I could use them if things got too bad at work and I didn't have money for groceries and things like that."

"I have done pretty well so far. I even have a few of the gift cards (left over)."

For parents giving gifts to their children, it is a little different. Tricia Doss, mother of a graduate, said she looks at practicality when shopping for a graduation gift.

"My daughter, who graduated in 2005, needed a car when she graduated," she said. "She drove a 1995 Toyota Camry since the day she turned 16, so I thought she needed something nice. I also didn't want her to have a car payment right out of college."

Tricia's husband, Mike Doss, who has a son from a different marriage, said he also chose the practical route when shopping for his son's graduation gift.

"What he needed was a new computer, so we sat down, and I told him to pick one out," Mike said. "He still uses it today."

Photojournalist to speak, receive degree at commencement

By Natasha Meyers
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pete Souza, former White House photographer, will receive his master's degree and speak at the Graduate School's commencement ceremony.

He also will give a visual presentation during his speech at 1 p.m. today in Bramlage Coliseum.

James Guikema, associate dean and associate vice provost, said he formally invited Souza to speak at the ceremony. He said Souza was an excellent choice, considering his experiences.

"It's the goal of the grad school to bring in commencement speakers that we feel can bring a positive influence to the graduating students, and we felt that his credentials were very appropriate," Guikema said.

In addition to speaking, Souza will receive a master's degree in mass communications and journalism.

"(I was) finishing my degree when they asked me to speak, and it was unexpected and flattering," Souza said.

Souza's work is on display until Dec. 21 at the Kemper Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union. The gallery is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. weekdays.

According to his Web site, www.petesouza.com, Souza joined the Chicago Tribune as a photojournalist in 1998 and is based in the newspaper's Washington Bureau. He has covered the White House, crossed the Hindu Kush Mountains by horseback, and has documented Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill.

Memorial for student will be today

By Nicole Johnston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A memorial service for a K-State student will be at 5 p.m. today in All Faiths Chapel.

Mary Thomsen, junior in education and history, died Nov. 30 on Kansas Highway 99 when she lost control of her car and crashed into a tree.

Thomsen's friends and Don Fallon, coordinator for religious activities in the Office of Student Life, planned the memorial service.

Fallon said he has made himself available for counseling and grief work for friends and family.

"We usually offer to do a memorial and help students plan and hold the service," Fallon said.

He said services help people celebrate the life of a friend.

One of Thomsen's professors remembered her fondly.

"Mary was a very bright, young woman with a lot of promise," James Sherow, associate professor of history, said.

Beth McQuade, junior in animal science and industry, is one student who helped plan the memorial service. She was Thomsen's roommate for more than two years. She said Thomsen was an enthusiastic person whose favorite quote was "Live, laugh, love."

"Fawna (Henke), her new roommate, actually said it best, 'Mary was too good for this world,'" McQuade said.

Although Thomsen's death was difficult for her friends, it has brought them closer together, McQuade said.

Family unity and traditions are a part of many celebrations. While holidays might have differences, some have common ground in their

4 types of residences compete in lighting contest

For the Lighting up the Little Apple contest, FarmHouse's decorations include a variety of colored lights and assorted decor on its lawn and roof. This is an all-university holiday lighting competition and includes apartments, off-campus houses, greek houses and residence halls.

Manhattan lit up this month as students decorated their houses and apartments not only to share holiday spirit, but also to win prizes in the Lighting up the Little Apple contest.

The all-university lighting competition had four housing categories for participating students: apartments, off-campus houses, greek houses and residence halls, Taylor Symons, sophomore in speech communication, said.

Symons said a winner and runner-up were chosen for each category based on students' votes.

In the apartment division, Rudolph's Homeboys triumphed. FarmHouse won the greek division, and Boyd captured the residence hall title. Ambassadors to the North Pole took first in the off-campus housing category.

The prizes included Pepsi products, an assortment of gift certificates to area businesses and a big-screen television for the winner of the greek division.

"The prizes are just going to get bigger," he said. "We're pretty excited about it."

Symons, Student Senate intern coordinator, said the contest was a project created by this year's intern class.

He said the class got the idea for the contest from Student Body President Lucas Maddy, who heard about a similar contest at Ohio State University.

"We want this to be a lasting tradition at K-State," Symons said.

Only fraternities registered for the greek division in the contest.

Powell Runyon, sophomore in construction science and management and member of Delta Sigma Phi, said his fraternity participated in the event.

Although the members decorated the house in years past for the holidays, he said they put more effort into it this year for the contest.

"There was no theme," Runyon said. "We just tried to make it look as good as we could."

Runyon said nearly all of the members helped decorate the house with icicle lights, a Santa Claus, a tree and a reindeer.

He said the fraternity bought most of the decorations for the contest and

Art, writing contest celebrates MLK Day

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Public Library will accept entries for its art and writing contest beginning today.

The contest is a part of Manhattan's Martin Luther King Jr. Day celebration and is open to everyone in the community.

Although this will be the first year the library organizes the contest, it has been a Manhattan tradition for many years.

"I've been at the library for six years now, and I was a junior high teacher before this," said Marcia Allen, collection development and processing manager at the library and co-chair of the art and writing contest. "I remember my students participating in this event."

Entrants are encouraged to focus on Martin Luther King Jr. and his ideals of nonviolence, social justice and building bridges between racial and ethnic divides.

Entries also can center on the theme "Diversity on Your Street" and incorporate the newly named Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Drive. There are plans for a Martin Luther King Jr. bust to be erected near Ahearn Field House that can be worked into entries.

The entries will be divided into categories, including four age groups starting at age 5. There also are separate categories for art and writing, which can include poetry, essays and persuasive letters to the editor.

The judging for the entries will be based on the pieces' originality, creativity, writing style or artistic quality and relevance.

Allen said the library usually receives a large number of entries from local schools. Many teachers have their classes make submissions.

"We distribute the materials to schools around town," Allen said. "We have a lot of young poets out there. In the school system, the kids get really excited."

Jillian McCurry, junior in family and consumer science education, said she thinks the idea for a Martin Luther King art and writing contest is a good one. She takes care of a third-grade student two mornings a week and said thinks the girl she babysits would enjoy participating in the contest.

"She's very creative and loves to show her creative ability by drawing," McCurry said.

This contest is not only a fun activity for children, but also a great way for them to learn the history of Martin Luther King Jr.

"Little kids don't really like to read about things as much. It just doesn't sink in as well," McCurry said.

"I think the hands-on learning they can get from this contest will help the importance of Martin Luther King Day sink in for them."

All the winning entries will be displayed at the Manhattan Town Center and at the Capitol in 2008. Each best-in-show winner will receive a $50 savings bond.

Allen said the library staff is excited to start receiving entries.

"I have been connected to this contest for a while," Allen said. "I'm thinking we'll see some really impressive things."

Entries will be accepted at the library until Jan. 9.

Author draws crowd for reading

By Megan Green
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People spilled out the doorways, lined the walls and filled the seats as they waited for author Dan Chaon to read part of his book.

Chaon, author of the book "You Remind Me," read an excerpt from one of his stories Thursday evening in the K-State Student Union.

The reading series, sponsored by the Department of English, brings in authors throughout the semester to read segments of their books.

Chaon, professor at Oberlin College, read the first chapter of his book "Sleep Walk," which is a work in progress.

"The problem is, I don't know what's going to happen next," Chaon said. "It's much easier to write a short story and not know what happens next. It's kind of stupid to write a novel and not know what happens next."

In "Sleep Walk," which Chaon said he hopes will be finished in a year, the main character, Robbie, is a foster child whose mother was jailed for murder. He supposedly has eight brothers and sisters, all with different fathers.

He starts to receive nightly phone calls from his sister, Cassie, whom he does not remember. Robbie can't remember Cassie's face or anything about his former life. Meanwhile, he has a vivid fantasy life.

"Robbie never knows what's real or not," Chaon said. "In that way he's like me."

Chaon said he works on several projects at once.

"I write in small segments, like a page or two, and then work on something else," he said. "I have probably between 20 and 40 projects going on at the same time."

He said the stories seem to play off each other in this way. Sometimes a character from a book he's writing will appear in another one.

After his reading, the session was opened for questions. People asked about the books Chaon is writing and how he comes up with his ideas.

"I'm really into the way the mind works and the way the memory works," Chaon said. "I almost always start with a title to give a thematic framework. Once I've written something, it's impossible for me to think up a title."

People gave him different ideas of how they thought the story might end.

"This is like a workshop just for me," Chaon said.

The audience was excited to hear him read because they said he read with different tones and voices.

"I like his writing now much more than I did," said Ethan Kuhn, Department of Continuing Education student in teaching. "He's animated more than when I read the story."

Owen Kennedy – A Democratic Congress. Oh, never mind, I already got that.

Kristen Roderick

– I want a puppy so I'm not lonely after I graduate. Plus, they're easier to keep happy than men.

Anthony Mendoza – I want an official Red Ryder, carbine action, 200-shot range model air rifle. I promise I won't shoot my eye out.

Kerry Fischer – A job, so I can start paying off my student loans. Oh wait, I work in journalism; I won't be making any money.

Megan Moser – Like always, a Barnes and Noble gift card. And lots of writers for next semester.

Leann Sulzen – I want a new digital recorder because mine broke. I'll need it as an investigative reporter in the spring.

Zachary T. Eckels – Guitar Hero 2. I want to wail like Carl from Aqua Teen Hunger Force. Solo!

Abby Brownback – I'd like to pull a Rip Van Winkle and sleep for the next month.

Emily Lawrence – A home. I hear competition for space under California overpasses is fierce.

Steven Doll – I would like a girlfriend. No, really, I would. So, if you are interested or know someone, my number is (785) 537-

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Tried and true

Take a 6th-year's advice: Just relax, remember tomorrow will come

Well, it looks like things are winding down. This is the last issue of the semester. It seems like things have gone by so fast. I thought before we all leave for "winter" break, I should impart some words of wisdom from this sixth-year student for your finals week schedule.

As a member of the Housing and Dining community, I also want to take the opportunity to tell all students living in the residence halls: on behalf of your resident assistants, please move out on time – they'd like to get home just as much as you.

For those of you who are "freaking out" because of finals, my greatest suggestion is to calm down. I've found that you can study and study, lose sleep, abandon friends, and do whatever else you want in order to cram, but in the end, it's your confidence and sanity that will pull you through your tests. (Having gone to the class during the semester wouldn't hurt, either.)

One of the few things I hate in this world, besides Oprah, is people who worry. I will say this once: worrying gets you nowhere. All it will give you is a migraine and an ulcer, neither of which will help you on a test, unless it's an anatomy test over the effects of stress on the human body. I tell my girlfriend all the time, "Worry all you want, but it's not going to change a thing." That also goes for the period between taking the test and waiting for the results. Who actually worries during that time – is it going to change anything?

Next, take advantage of free time. No, do not use it for studying. That's why it's called free time. Use it to watch a movie or television; your brain needs to veg out on a regular basis. Don't have any free time? That means you are one of the "freaking out" people mentioned earlier. In this case, follow the above guidelines.

Just relax. It's not the end of the world. Tomorrow will come, and with it, a new semester. I look back on this semester and all the amazing times K-State has seen. We've been graced with former U.S. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld for a Landon Lecture, and we saw our Wildcats take down the Texas beast at home.

If you've gone to the Peters Recreation Complex in the past few months, you've seen the start of the biggest project in the state of Kansas: the Jardine Redevelopment Project, which will bring a new level of prosperity to K-State in the years to come. There's still another semester to go, and with it will come new successes, new challenges, new surprises, new classes, new problems and new opportunities.

Next semester will be just as full as any we've had at K-State. But as my grandma always says, "It's no hill for a stepper."

Here's to a great semester and an even better spring.

Senior considers piracy as post-college career

"Fifteen men on a dead man's chest. Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum. Drink, and the devil be done for the rest. Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum."

This is my new mantra, or it will be after May, when I graduate.

A pirate's life is for me. After my ship is assembled and the black sails are double-stitched and hung to perfection, I will collect my belongings, three-pointed hat, bottle of rum and compass and head to the open seas. Somewhere along the way I'll attempt to recruit a few crewmembers, or at least someone who can sail a ship. Surely a few dozen viewings of the "Pirates of the Caribbean" movies and "Peter Pan" will have prepared me enough for my future of piracy.

Who wouldn't want to sail the world aimlessly, swashbuckling around, acquiring booty and pushing others off the plank? While my crew and I stop at different ports, I'm sure I'll learn all about world commerce and trading, and I might even pick up a new language or two. I can't wait to drink lots of aged rum and carry a green and yellow parrot on my shoulder.

OK, so the pirating thing isn't likely to happen. I'm too scared of getting bad karma to steal, and I favor grammar and personal hygiene. Although I admire Keira Knightley, Johnny Depp and Orlando Bloom for taking on the buccaneering lifestyle – long enough to make a handful of blockbusters – I don't think I have a future with it.

Boats make me nervous and saying the word "booty" makes me blush. Guys with peg legs and eye patches intimidate me.

In all honesty, the pirate plan isn't even my own. It recently was suggested to me as a possible comeback to my family's constant nagging of, "You're a senior now. What are you going to do after graduation?" Although I might be graduating soon, that does not in any way mean I know what I want to do with my life.

My best solution thus far: tell people I'm going to become a pirate. So far it's working better than it sounds. When you give people the pirate reply, they laugh, and as long as you can keep a straight face, they'll give you a look of disbelief mixed with pity and leave you alone.

Obviously with the tens of thousands of dollars my parents poured into funding my higher education, it wouldn't be kosher for me to run off to the Caribbean in search of a ship and Captain Morgan. I'm going to do the adult thing, eventually. But until then, I'm sticking to my skull and crossbones.

CAMPUS FOURUM

395-4444 -or-fourum@spub.ksu.edu

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

So long, K-State. It's been a crazy five-and-a-half. Love, your senior scooter girl.

Whoa, it's cold outside. Merry Christmas, everyone.

I like reading Chuck Armstrong's articles because they make me feel smarter.

Kelly, your blank stare really intimidates me.

From the Public Editor:

Take concerns to new liaison; heckle him about future issues

Look for a blinding flash of light tonight at midnight.

You see, today is my final day as public editor of the Collegian.

With the end of semester comes the end of production, and with the end of production comes the end of my job and my transformation back into whatever I used to be.

Don't cry for me, though, as I knew all along this day would come. At times, I almost looked forward to it.

Being an advocate for the readers has changed some of my opinions on journalism and solidified others. I've heard from angry sources who've been wildly misquoted, readers who've been hurt by errors in coverage, and all sorts of people with all sorts of opinions.

There are a few things I think need to change with this paper. For starters, do something new with the Fourum. Few readers like the compromised version, and if the staff doesn't want to restore it or kill it, then it needs to innovate.

I also think Collegian policies need a serious rethinking. There are a few rules in our manuals that make little sense, including one that says the Collegian should never cover suicides unless they're in public or committed by a public figure.

This paper should cover whatever is newsworthy, and it is news when students, faculty or staff die by any means. To be fair, though, extra care and good taste should be put to use.

Lastly, this paper needs to be more careful when under pressure. Stupid mistakes in high-profile stories (like misspelling "Snyder" a year ago) or factual errors about deceased students stick in readers' minds and hang around our necks for years.

Part of the problem is that the paper has been short on staff for some time now, but the fact remains that we can, and should, do better.

On the flip side, many readers told me this semester's Collegian was notably better than it's been in previous years. So there.

All that stuff is for the next editorial board to handle, however, and I am ready for my turn to be over. Fear not, though, for another comes in my place.

Donnie Lee, staff artist and creator of the Tabernacle Woods comic, will be the Collegian's public editor when we start production again in January.

Take your new problems to Lee instead of me. I'll be off trying to be a Collegian staff photographer. No kidding.

He also will join me today for my final "Yell at the Public Editor" session, so you can come yell at both of us, if you like.

I've spoken with Lee about his plans for representing the Collegian readership, and I think he has some great ideas for this paper, but I can't tell you about them. That's his job, and he'll tell you all about it when we come back.

The time has come for me to go now and move on to what comes next. Let's just hope I don't turn into a pumpkin.

Logan C. Adams is still the Collegian's public editor, but only until noon today in the K-State Student Union. Send comments to publiceditor@pub.ksu.edu.

Limit snacking, divide workouts to avoid holiday weight gain

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the semester ends and students begin to de-program from all of the stress of finals week, fitness and exercise often get pushed to the back burner. However, there are ways everyone can stay fit and slim over the holidays.

Rob Jewett, owner of Absolute Fitness and certified personal trainer, has several ideas to battle the bulge over Christmas break.

1. DETERMINE YOUR FITNESS LEVEL

It is not a good idea to try to do too much, Jewett said. For example, if you don't usually work out, start small with body weight exercises and light jogging. If you are more experienced, try some weight training or push-ups.

2. DON'T SET UNREALISTIC WORKOUT OR DIET GOALS

With the hustle and bustle of the holiday season, it is difficult to block off large amounts of time to work out. Workout time can accumulate, meaning three 10-minute workouts are equal to one 30-minute workout, he said.

It is unrealistic to assume you will not eat when there is delicious holiday food available. Rather than eating chips and dip, snacks that are available throughout the year, eat more seasonal snacks that are not available year-round, Jewett said.

3. IDENTIFY AREAS IN WHICH YOU CAN BE MORE ACTIVE

Parking farther away at the store, taking a few extra laps at the mall, and drinking more water are great ways to maintain fitness. Usually when students go home, they eat more fast food than they do at school, Jewett said. Look for healthier menu items or avoid those types of restaurants all together. Avoiding the extra fat and calories is much easier than losing them after they turn into fat.

4. DON'T SKIP MEALS

Many people skip lunch or breakfast in order to save room for the dinner. This actually has the opposite effect, as the body slows the metabolism to preserve food, making you less hungry later in the day, Jewett said.

5. CONTROL DRINKING AND SNACKING

The holidays are great times to see old high school friends and family. Most of these reunions take place in social settings where alcohol is involved.

For those who like mixed drinks, Jewett suggested drinking diet soda rather than regular. Caffeine-free and lower-sodium soda also is better than regular.

Snacking is another leading cause of weight gain over school breaks. At holiday parties, snack food is often available. Since some snacking might be unavoidable, Jewett suggested trying to eat less than usual.

K-State's Marlies Gipson looks to pass around an Alcorn State defender in the Wildcats' first-place finish in the Commerce Bank Classic.

Women's basketball team looks to extend win streak to 5 games

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Getting a lead and keeping it. That's what the K-State women's basketball team has been able to do throughout the early part of the season.

Of the 325 minutes the Wildcats have played, they have trailed for just 42. In games against Creighton and Mississippi Valley State, the Wildcats (7-1) held the lead from start to finish.

But after nearly blowing a 20-point lead Tuesday at Louisiana Tech — a game in which they held on for a 64-61 win — the Wildcats will look to turn in a more complete effort against the University of Missouri-Kansas City on Saturday.

The Kangaroos have struggled so far this season. Still, they have had some success against the Wildcats in the past, winning three consecutive home games until a loss in the 2004-05 season.

The Kangaroos (2-8) are led by junior center Alysa Klein, who averages a team-high 13.2 points and 8.1 rebounds per game. She also leads the team in blocks (29), shooting percentage (.553) and free throw percentage (.818).

Despite playing without a true center, K-State has been able to dominate teams in the paint — outscoring opponents 274-150. They have held the advantage in just about every statistical category, including rebounds, steals and blocks.

One of the reasons has been the play of sophomore forward Marlies Gipson, who has been forced to take on a much bigger role at both ends of the floor due to the Wildcats' lack of size. Gipson nearly averages a double-double (13.4 points per game, 8.5 rebounds per game) and has blocked 18 shots this season.

Junior guard Kimberly Dietz has connected on 17-of-48 three-point shots and has a team-high 13.5 points per game. Sophomore guard Shalee Lehning collected nine rebounds and had three steals against Louisiana Tech.

On the road ... again

The Wildcats found their rhythm Tuesday night, but will face a tough North Dakota State team Saturday

By Nick Dunn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One player on the K-State men's basketball team is getting a little tired of the constant travel.

In their latest expedition, the Wildcats will head to Fargo, N.D., on Saturday to play North Dakota State in their fifth road game of the season. K-State (5-3) didn't play its fifth game away from home last year until a Jan. 28 tilt against Colorado.

Freshman center Jason Bennett wasn't around a year ago, but he made his feelings clear about road games after Tuesday's home victory over Cleveland State.

"This past week I really missed my home," Bennett said. "I really don't like going on the road and playing, because I did that a lot in high school. But it's our job, so we've got to do it."

K-State coach Bob Huggins has repeatedly said he likes to schedule his road games with the idea he can recruit in the areas his team visits. This trip, needless to say, is not one he's responsible for scheduling.

Fargo isn't exactly a recruiting hotbed.

The trip to North Dakota State (5-2) is left over from a previous scheduling commitment made under ex-coach Jim Wooldridge. Huggins opted not to buy out of the contract.

K-State beat North Dakota State the previous two seasons at Bramlage Coliseum, including an 82-56 victory last year.

That said, the Wildcats can't overlook this season's Bison, who will put a 10-game home winning streak on the line Saturday.

North Dakota State also has a current four-game winning streak, including a 64-60 win over then-No. 8 Marquette in its last contest.

Led by 6-foot-8 senior forward Andre Smith, the Bison were ranked 22nd in the latest Mid-Major Top 25 poll.

The Wildcats might have found their rhythm as well in the pounding of Cleveland State Tuesday. The team shot a season-high 61.5 percent from the field in the 93-60 victory.

How well that translates to the road, however, is a different story.

K-State is 1-3 away from Bramlage this season, and the team lost its last two games to California and Colorado State.

If they hope to be competitive once Big 12 Conference play starts, the Wildcats will have to find ways to win on the road — especially against opponents like North Dakota State.

"We're excited," said senior forward Cartier Martin, who scored 21 points in the Wildcats' win on Freshman Jason Bennett goes for a block against Cleveland State. The Wildcats will try to improve their 5-3 record when they play at North Dakota State Saturday. Bennett has 22 blocks this season and is three blocks shy of breaking the freshman record for blocked shots set in 1996.

Tuesday night. "We want to kind of redeem ourselves a little bit. We beat them last year, and they're going to be looking for revenge. We just have to play our type of basketball, stick to our principles, and stay poised."

Christopher Hanewinkel | COLLEGIAN

Jinx on K-State sports graduates; teams will return to glory

Congratulations, K-State sports fans, on your trip to the NCAA men's and women's basketball tournament come March, and the return trip to the Big 12 Conference Championship football game in December 2007.

This is bound to happen — for one reason. No, it's not because Bob Huggins is the men's basketball coach or because those freshmen on the football team who thrived late in the season will have that much more game experience.

The reason is because I will be far away from Manhattan and K-State athletics.

Yep, after five semesters at K-State, it is time to move on, and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics will be much better because of it.

Since I arrived in fall 2004, things haven't gone well. Don't believe me? Go back to the 2003 season, the year of the three Big 12 championships picked up by the volleyball, women's basketball and football teams.

Now switch gears to my first year at K-State. Volleyball made the postseason, but that was about it. The women's basketball team led by Kendra Wecker nearly won the Big 12 Conference Tournament in Kansas City, Mo., but faltered once again in the NCAA Tournament, losing in the second round.

Then there is the football team — the defending Big 12 champions. Darren Sproles was a Heisman candidate for about four weeks, and then conference play started.

That's pretty much all you need to know about that season.

Because of time constraints, let's move on to some brief highlights of the 2005-06 seasons.

Things got a bit better for the football program; it at least won one more game than it did the previous year, but it didn't qualify for a bowl game once again.

The men's basketball team struggled again, and Jim Wooldridge paid the price.

At least the women's basketball team won the Women's National Invitation Tournament, establishing itself as the 65th-best team in the nation.

Of course, in my last semester, things are starting to turn around at K-State. Under first-year football coach Ron Prince, the Wildcats qualified for the postseason, finishing with a 7-5 record.

People outside of the Big 12 area actually know K-State has a basketball team, and I won't have to hear the inevitable comment from people back home during conversations, "Yeah, your school — the Jayhawks, right? They have a good basketball team." The hype is better than the team is right now, but it should be a lot better come spring when I'm gone — or it might be that guy named Bill Walker who will help.

So if you're a gambler, place your money on K-State. And to the others on campus who feel they are the reason for K-State's recent downfall, it's not you; it's me.

You just wait and see.

Many K-State fans will have to belly up to their favorite bar to watch the Wildcats in the Texas Bowl, as the game will be broadcast exclusively on the NFL Network.

NFL Network reaches more than 41 million households but is not available to most basic cable subscribers.

When the Kansas City Chiefs played on NFL Network, the game was available on local cable. However, the network has no plans to offer a similar option for the Texas Bowl.

Cox Communications, the primary cable provider in Manhattan, offers the NFL Network as part of its digital cable package (channel 261). Basic cable subscribers who want to upgrade to digital service can get the first month free, Cox spokesperson Sarah Kaufman said.

DIRECTV and Dish Network subscribers also have access to the NFL Network.

For everyone else, K-State's match-up with No. 16 Rutgers will be televised at several Manhattan bars and restaurants.

BBO | Royals sign Mariners Meche, release pitcher Hernandez

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — The Kansas City Royals agreed to terms with right-hander Gil Meche on a five-year deal worth $55 million on Thursday as baseball's winter meetings neared a conclusion.

Meche has a 55-44 career record with a 4.65 ERA in 147 games, all of them with the Seattle Mariners.

Meche was 11-8 with a 4.48 ERA and career highs of 186 2-3 innings and 156 strikeouts in 32 starts for Seattle in 2006.

Meche, who must pass a physical for the deal to be completed, will receive a $2 million signing bonus along with a $7 million salary in 2007, $11 million in each of the next two years and $12 million each in 2010 and '11.

In another move, the Royals released pitcher Rinelvis Hernandez, who struggled with conditioning and inconsistency. The right-hander was 6-10 with a 6.48 ERA in 21 starts this year.

FBC | North Carolina State set to hire Tom O'Brien as head coach

RALEIGH, N.C. — North Carolina State didn't need to go far to find a new football coach. In fact, the school didn't even have to leave its own division in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

N.C. State is set to hire Boston College's Tom O'Brien and is working out final details of a contract, a university official said Thursday.

The official spoke on condition of anonymity because a contract has not been approved by the school's board of trustees, whose personnel committee has scheduled a teleconference for Friday.

Once a deal is complete and O'Brien changes addresses, it will add spice to a division rivalry that began when Boston College became the ACC's 12th member before the 2005 season.

This year, N.C. State beat Boston College when first-time starter Daniel Evans threw the winning touchdown pass with 8.5 seconds left in a 17-15 victory.

Cheerleader competes in finals of contest

By Regina Nowak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State cheerleaders are used to energizing the crowd during K-State games — and now one is working to do it online.

After succeeding in the first round of an online spirit contest, Holly Thomas, junior in secondary education and mathematics, said she wants all K-State fans to help her take the lead during the final round of the Samsung Sideline Contest for Athlon Sports, an online spirit contest for college cheerleaders and dancers.

Thomas, who made it to the final round of this year's contest, said she sees it as an opportunity for cheerleaders around the nation to put their squad, as well as their university, in the spotlight.

Any spirit team member was able to sign up for this contest by completing an online registration form. Every three weeks, Athlon Sports editors selected one person to represent each of the major college conferences. Their profiles and pictures were displayed on the contest Web site, and visitors could vote for their favorite.

Thomas was elected for the first round by the Athlon Sport editors and was ranked fourth with 8,033 votes.

"At the beginning of this year I was in the round-one competition," Thomas said. "Although I was not the winner of the round, I advanced to the finals because they really wanted to have a Big 12 (Conference) contestant."

Thomas was the only K-State cheerleader chosen this year, but she said she hopes there will be more next year.

Thomas said she decided to apply for the spirit contest because cheerleading coach Al Enlow encouraged the team to turn in résumés and pictures to Athlon Sports this summer.

"We have had cheerleaders in the competition in past years," she said. "It is a great way to promote our cheerleading program as well as recruit cheerleaders from around the nation."

Thomas said her favorite parts of the competition have been the e-mails and Facebook.com messages she has received from friends and family.

"It's very entertaining, and it's nice to know I have their support," she said.

Thomas' four sisters and both of her parents have been supportive, she said. They sent e-mails to their friends and voted whenever they had the chance.

One of Thomas' sisters said she has put up flyers in a few locations in the Kansas City area.

"My friends are also helping vote, which I really appreciate, because I know everyone is so busy with school right now," Thomas said.

Enlow said he has encouraged the members of this year's cheer squad to participate in the competition because it brings national exposure for K-State, K-State athletics and the cheerleading program.

This is Enlow's third season at K-State, he said, and the squad has had a representative each of the three seasons.

"Holly is a great rep and deserves the recognition as she continues to be an example for others to follow concerning school spirit," he said.

"She is also a great student in math education. The exposure will always be an advantage of being selected by Athlon."

Last week, Thomas was notified by the Athlon Sport editors that she would be in the final round, which began Nov. 26.

"They simply told me the day that everyone could start voting," she said. "I am off to a slow start, but the competition still has two and a half more weeks of voting, and with K-State's support, hopefully it will turn around."

The winner of this year's competition receives a prize pack for his or her school that includes $1,000 cash, 42" and 32" Samsung LCD Flat-Panel televisions, a Samsung Sports Camcorder and a Hi-Fi Conversion DVD recorder. Additionally, the winning contestant will be featured in a photo shoot in Athlon Sports' 2007 College Football Annual.

Thomas is ranked eighth of nine finalists. K-State fans can help her advance until Dec. 14 by going to www.athlonsports.com, clicking on the "Sideline Spirit" icon, and voting by clicking on Thomas' name.

"Holly is a true K-Stater," Enlow said. "It would be great to support her and KSU by voting for her."

Ministry helps with adoption, crisis pregnancies, parenting

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gloria Baxter, senior in marketing, said she saw an advertisement in the Collegian last year about pregnancy testing through Life Choice Ministries Pregnancy Testing Center.

Baxter went to have a test done and found out she was pregnant. She said she was told about the programs and services the organization offers and decided to attend prenatal classes.

By attending classes, Baxter said she received "mommy dollars," fake money that allows mothers to buy baby items at the organization's Friendship Room.

Today, Baxter said she attends school, works and loves her life with 5-month-old daughter, Brooke.

Baxter said she is thankful for people welcoming her at LCM.

"I felt like I had a place there," she said.

For anyone in need of a support group during pregnancy, Baxter said LCM is a great option.

"They're going to help you through all the options," she said. "It's just amazing how much they helped me out financially. They provided the things that I needed."

"I also became closer to God. It helped me out spiritually and financially."

During July 2003, Erick Valentine, assistant professor of accounting, and his wife said they were discussing adoption with friends and heard about LCM. Valentine and his wife decided to explore adoption through LCM.

Valentine said the organization is warm and welcoming, and he and his wife were walked through the process of adoption and finding a birth mother. After four months of paperwork, it was time to wait.

The Valentines waited to receive word from a birth mother. Finally, a mother chose the couple, and interviews were done on both sides. It was a match, and the Valentines became the parents of Ivan.

Valentine said the organization tries to make the process as smooth as possible.

"It's an emotional time for everyone," he said.

Valentine said he and his wife were not expecting to adopt, but after working with LCM and seeing how other groups work, he was happy with the time they had with this organization.

"We are most comfortable with the ethics and the up-front, transparent nature of Life Choice," he said.

Cindy Stipp, LCM assistant director, said the organization was started about 19 years ago by Karen Wyatt, a woman who had a heart for women in the midst of crisis pregnancies.

While LCM is a non-denominational Christian organization, Stipp said it doesn't force its outlook or views on others. The environment is safe and non-condemning, she said.

"The heart of the ministry is basically pro-women," she said.

The organization offers free pregnancy tests. If a test is negative, Stipp said LCM workers will ask if they can talk to the woman about choices for the future.

"We talk to them more about valuing their body that is really counter-culture and help them to see how beautiful they are and the potential they have," she said.

Other services for soon-to-be mothers also are available. The parenting class is an involved program, Stipp said.

The organization is dedicated to respecting the decisions of the women who come for help.

"Loving them well enough, listening to their stories, and giving them correct research information," she said. "We want to help them make a wiser, more informed decision."

Modern masterpiece

Bob Dylan resurrects career again with album reminiscent of yesteryear

"Modern Times"

Grade: A

Album review by Eric Brown

Under the pseudonym "Jack Frost," Bob Dylan produced his own album for just the second time in his 44 years as a recording artist. Along with overseeing his record's production, Dylan recorded the album with "the best band I've ever been in," he told Rolling Stone Magazine.

The result is "Modern Times," a thunderous combination of rockabilly, blues, country twang, swing and jazz, serenaded by Dylan's cigarettes-and-whiskey growl, which has become his trademark in recent years.

Though Dylan named his 31st studio album "Modern Times," the music of this record hardly fits the title. The 10 tracks on Dylan's latest record resemble those of past working-man musicians like Muddy Waters, Hank Williams and Jerry Lee Lewis. Amid these sounds of America's yesteryears, Dylan discusses divine reckoning, destroyed levees and looking for Alicia Keys in Tennessee.

Since its release in late August, "Modern Times" has been hailed as a classic by many music publications. Entertainment Weekly noted that "Modern Times" ranks among Dylan's finest albums. (It's remarkable to put an album by anyone in the same category as Dylan's "Blonde on Blonde," "John Wesley Harding" or "Blood on the Tracks.")

In another rave review, Rolling Stone called it Dylan's third straight masterpiece.

Dylan's other works included in this trio of "masterpieces" are the 1997 Grammy-winning "Time Out of Mind," a ghostly, dark collection of tracks about isolation, and the 2001 "Love and Theft," a rambunctious blend of blues, rockabilly and swing, similar to "Modern Times."

These three albums are the nucleus of Dylan's current, and second, career comeback.

This string of classic records follows two decades of few hits and mostly misses by the man who was an icon of the 1960s. During the 20 years before "Time Out of Mind," Dylan's career was highlighted mainly by greatest hits collections and releases of bootlegs, most of which featured music from Dylan's golden age.

The first of Dylan's two career resurrections was in the mid 1970s, when he released another trio of pop-folk splendor, "The Basement Tapes," "Blood on the Tracks" and "Desire."

This revival came after a five-year period in which critics and fans alike viewed Dylan and his music as less relevant, socially and politically, after the close of the '60s.

So don't be alarmed if Dylan's next few albums are a disappointment. Just wait another five to 20 years for his next threesome of musical masterworks. If his mind and body hold out that long, most likely he will have made the best albums by anyone over the age of 80, and to be honest, I doubt his voice will sound any different.

Local bands to play over break to broaden fan base

By Eric Brown

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Even with K-State students leaving town for winter break, the Manhattan music scene will stay in full swing.

Evan Tuttle, member of the Manhattan Music Coalition, said not only will the shows continue, the music of Manhattan won't miss a beat.

"You would think that our local music shows would suffer over the break from the lack of students in the area," Tuttle said. "But we've learned in the past that's not the case."

Tuttle said winter break provides good opportunities for local bands.

"So many townies that have left Manhattan come back over the break, and many of them attend the shows in Aggieville," Tuttle said. "This provides the bands with a whole different audience to perform to and an opportunity to broaden their fan base. Bands would be foolish not to want to perform over the break just because the students are gone."

HOLIDAY | Kwanzaa celebrates African-American heritage; Hanukkah marks Jerusalem's liberation point when the sun is lowest in midday on the horizon," Prins said. "It is looked at as the midpoint of a new cycle, and so in many different cultures that has been celebrated."

ORIGINS OF GIFT GIVING

The exchanging of gifts, a key part of many holiday celebrations, also finds its origins in ancient times, Prins said.

"In the rural settings, during the summertime, everybody's hard at work harvesting, planting. They didn't have time to celebrate," he said.

"So when the harvesting ends, that's when the celebration starts. Every year would have those who did well in the harvest, and those who did poorly and had nothing, and tension would build between the two."

Prins said giving presents eased the tension.

"This theme of goodness to others and sharing is the moral of many of these stories," he said.

ORIGINS OF SANTA CLAUS

Santa Claus, the jolly character who has become the American embodiment of the Christmas spirit, actually began in the legends of British and Dutch tradition, Prins said.

He said the American image of Santa Claus is a combination of the British Father Christmas and the Dutch Saint Nicholas.

"In England, you have Father Christmas, who is the big rolly-polly guy, and in the Netherlands you have Saint Nicholas, who was a tall bishop with a long white beard," he said.

Prins grew up in the Netherlands, where Saint Nicholas Day is an important holiday, celebrated on Dec. 6. In the Dutch tradition, Saint Nicholas Day is the day when gifts and Christmas itself are more of a low-key religious occasion.

"The importance of Saint Nicholas Day carried over to New York while it was still a Dutch colony, and that's where the American Santa Claus concept was introduced," Prins said.

KWANZAA

Kwanzaa is a holiday that recently became part of the American tradition. Kwanzaa is a celebration of African-American heritage.

It's a seven-day celebration that is runs from Dec. 26 to Jan. 1. Byron Williams, Kwanzaa coordinator for Black Student Union, said Maulana Karenga established Kwanzaa in 1966.

"Basically, what Kwanzaa is all about is unity within the African-American community," Williams said. "It has seven principles, which represent the seven candles of the Kinara, or candle holder."

The seven principals are as follows:

- Umoja, or unity.
- Kujichagulia, or self-determination.
- Ujima, which is about helping out the community.

■ Ujamaa, or cooperative economics.

■ Nia, or purpose, so people continue to move in the right direction as a community.

■ Kuumba, or creativity.

■ Imani, or faith.

Williams said BSU has celebrated Kwanzaa at K-State since 1991. The feast that traditionally closes Kwanzaa takes place at a group dinner during dead week.

HANUKKAH

Hanukkah, the festival of lights celebrated by the Jewish community, takes place over eight days in December.

The exact dates alternate every year as the Jewish holy year is guided by the lunar calendar. The festival takes place in honor of a story from ancient Jerusalem, said Ellen Reynolds, administrative assistant to the associate provost of international programs.

The story said Jerusalem had been liberated from an attacking Syrian army. The temple had been desecrated by the Syrians, and the Jewish people needed their temple to be cleansed to be holy again. The menorah, which acts as an eternal flame, only had enough oil to burn for one day, but it lasted for eight. A menorah is lit each night of the festival in remembrance of this miracle, Reynolds said.

Reynolds grew up celebrating Hanukkah with her family in New York. Reynolds now attends Hanukkah celebrations at the Manhattan Jewish Congregation with her family.

"Some of the Hanukkah traditions we have (are) latkes, which are potato pancakes; the dreidel, which is a spinning top game; and gelt, which are chocolate coins wrapped in gold foil," Reynolds said. "A common misconception is that there are eight days of gift giving, maybe some of the richer families do that, but most don't. We usually just exchange gifts on the first night."

Reynolds said Hanukkah is different from other holidays in the Jewish community.

"In Judaism, we have high holy days like Yom Kippur, which is a day of fasting and repentance. Hanukkah is more of a happy, low-key celebration," she said.

used a few things it had from previous years.

"We chose to do it for a good house bonding event," he said.

Amanda Schiappacasse, junior in accounting, entered her house, 1743 Laramie St., as Merry Laramie Christmas for the event.

This is the first year Schiappacasse has lived in the house, but she said she has decorated her parents' house before. Her decorations include lights and Christmas trees she made outside. Inside, she adorned her house with stockings and a Christmas tree with K-State decorations.

Schiappacasse said the decorations took her a full day to complete with the help of her family.

"It was really fun," she said. "It was definitely hard work, but it paid off because it looks cute and festive."

Students voted for their favorite participants Wednesday and Thursday through an e-mail sent by the Office of Student Activities and Services, Symons said.

The e-mail included a Web site where students could view the residences and another Web site where students could vote.

Physics department restores 67-year-old telescope

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Department of Physics might have one of the newest old pieces of equipment on campus.

First built in 1939, the 10-foot Perkin Elmer/Moffet telescope was once the pride and joy of Willard Hall, but when the department got a new telescope in the mid-1970s, the old one was disassembled and squirreled away.

For 30 years it sat, in pieces and dust-covered, in the forgotten department's depths.

"It was on its way downhill, basically," Russell Reynolds, physics machine shop supervisor, said. "It was set aside for the new telescope and left."

But the 67-year-old telescope recently has been reborn, and, thanks to Reynolds, again is exploring the cosmos.

"When I became involved with this instrument, it was torn into pieces and strewn all over," Reynolds said. "I was the one to bring in because I knew every component. I knew what all the components are and where they went."

Working in the physics shop, Reynolds said he has been making optical equipment for 27 years and used his experience to restore the telescope.

Despite a healthy amount of neglect, the scope itself was in generally good condition. The optics had corroded due to condensation and contact with the brass in the tubing, and several layers of paints had to be sloughed off.

In addition, a movable tripod was built to hold the telescope and the equatorial mount, the mechanism that, once aligned with the North Star, allows the telescope to be adjusted to compensate for the earth's rotation.

Working on the glass and tubing of a precision observatory-grade telescope requires more care and effort than Windex, sandpaper and nails. Reynolds said he has spent about 200 hours of restoration time to bring the scope back to full operation.

The results of the operation have caught a few eyes in the physics department, and although the future of the telescope isn't certain, Reynolds said it is going to be a part of the physics department in one form or another.

"That's really going to be up to the professors. Now that they've seen it in its restored condition, they want to keep hold of it for now," he said.

Spit and polish on K-State's old telescope is just one of the changes the physics department hopes to make. At the top of the wish list is a new observatory for both the new and old telescopes.

"We used to have an observatory on top of Cardwell Hall," said Bharat Ratra, professor of physics and adviser of the Astronomy Club. "It hasn't been maintained in quite a while."

Problems with the Cardwell observatory sprout from the growth of K-State and Manhattan in recent decades. Along with more people and more businesses come more lighting and more light pollution, which makes pinpointing faint objects in the night sky almost impossible.

"We're trying to find a place, somewhere in the Konza (Prairie Research Center), maybe, to build an observatory," Ratra said. "We're basically blinded on campus."

Ratra said grants and other proposals have begun for funds to construct the new observatory, which could cost anywhere from $100,000 to $200,000.

Kansas observatories, due to their relative isolation, often are well-suited to capture astronomical events. Ratra said many pictures from the most recent visit of Halley's Comet in 1986 were taken in western Kansas.

When it comes to building the observatory, Ratra said much of the work might be done by faculty to trim costs, and ultimately, their work is at least easier than current efforts to restore the Hubble Orbital Telescope.

"They have to go out there and do all their work in space," Ratra said. "We have it much simpler down here."

Wildlife photographer to shoot zoo's animals

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wildlife and nature are Joel Sartore's specialty. He goes places others only dream about, but he brings back a taste of what he has seen — with his lens.

Sartore, a wildlife photographer, will share his personal experiences capturing images across the globe at 7 p.m. Saturday at the Commission Room in Manhattan City Hall. The event is free and open to the public.

Sartore has 20 years of wildlife photography experience, including 14 years with National Geographic Magazine.

Sartore came to Sunset Zoological Park a few months ago to photograph the zoo animals, said Rachel Soash, the zoo's curator of education. While he was photographing animals across the country, Soash said Sartore heard numerous times about the quality of the animals at Sunset Zoo.

"It's really a very big compliment because we work so hard to be recognized as one of the top zoos out there," Soash said.

Dianne Paukstelis, the zoo's marketing director, said Sartore will show some of his photographs while highlighting his experience as a wildlife photographer.

"We really appreciated his donation of his expertise," Paukstelis said.

Sartore, of Lincoln, Neb., will photograph the wildlife at the zoo on Saturday.

Soash said having a professional photographer come to share his experiences with the community is an honor.

"I think a lot of people are really excited about it," she said. "I think it's really exciting that some of our animals could be in National Geographic."

Singer, guitarist to aim show to audience in performances at Manhattan Arts Center

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan residents will be able to get into the holiday spirit with seasonal music this weekend.

Ann Zimmerman will perform winter songs and Christmas music at 8 to 9 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Arts Center. Tickets are $12 for adults and $6 for children. Families of three or more will get $1 off each ticket for Saturday's performance.

Tess Purvis, program and marketing director for the arts center, said Zimmerman is a Kansas prairie girl with a lovely voice.

"We just love her," Purvis said.

"She's been in theater productions here. She really gears her show towards the audience."

Purvis said tonight's show will be directed toward an older audience, and Saturday's show will be geared toward a family crowd.

This means there will be a few different pieces each night.

Zimmerman will play the guitar and sing.

The show will begin with a performance by K-State's a cappella group, Cadence, tonight and Saturday. Purvis said Cadence performed for the arts center office last year, and everyone in the office wanted it to open for Zimmerman.

"It's two completely different styles of music," Purvis said.

The arts center's "Wrap It Up 2006," also will be on exhibit and for sale.

"You can listen to some Christmas music and do your Christmas shopping," Purvis said.

The performances will include songs from Zimmerman's repertoire as well as Christmas songs.

People should be prepared for some audience participation, Zimmerman said, as she likes to encourage people to sing along.

Larry Weaver, professor of physics, also might sing with Zimmerman for a few songs both nights.

Zimmerman's two nephews and niece, all younger than 10 years old, will join her for a few songs on Saturday.

"We have the adorability factor," she said.

Zimmerman said she is always excited to perform at the arts center because the audience is inviting.

"I feel right at home there," she said.

Philanthropies' participation, proceeds increase

By Dustin Sanborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Philanthropies supported by the K-State greek community raised $105,000 during the past two semesters.

Each greek house raises money for its own national organization or cause. Multiple houses often combine to support one philanthropy.

"It is very important that the K-State community see what the greek community does for organizations all over the U.S.," said Annie Timmons, Panhellenic Council's director of public relations.

Phi Gamma Delta's Run for Leukemia raised $13,500 for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society. Sigma Nu and Sigma Phi Epsilon's Sunset Revival raised $12,000 for the Christopher Reeve Foundation.

Chi Omega and Sigma Nu Pledge Games raised $7,000 for the American Red Cross. Kappa Alpha Theta's Wild-Kat Chase raised $5,017 for CASA, and Kappa Delta's Shamrock Golf Tournament raised $9,000 for the Crisis Center.

"Every year the K-State greek community is awarded for being No. 1 in the nation among other universities in our division," Timmons said.

"Our philanthropies are just one of the reasons we consistently come out on top."

reached 7,370, and greeks have logged more than 20,000 total hours of community service in the past two semesters, according to PHC and Interfraternity Council records.

"The amount of money raised has steadily increased every year," said Paul Kauffman, Panhellenic director of community and internal relations. "Philanthropy and community service is something that the greek community takes great pride in."

Graduates can save with 401Ks, IRAs through new employers

By Jesse Sachdeva
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As they enter the real world, many students land in a new financial situation.

After getting that first job, students might find themselves finally earning a stable income. For that little bit of money left at the end of the month, there are several investment options available for those looking to make their money grow, some of which are perfectly suited for those just starting a career.

"I think a lot of the non-business students I know are aware of the stock market and some of the more high-risk investments," Matt Elder, junior in finance, said. "They usually don't know about things like hedge funds, money market funds or mutual funds, some of the lower-risk investing that goes on everyday."

Two terms many students hear in interviews during their search for a job are "Roth IRA" and "401K."

Named after a section of the U.S. Internal Revenue Code, 401K plans are sponsored by employers and allow employees to save for retirement without immediately being charged income tax on the money being saved. However, income tax is charged all at once on the day the plan matures.

The plans allow employees to select from an assortment of investment options, including stocks, bonds, mutual funds and others. It might include the option to purchase the company's stock.

Since 401Ks are organized through an employer, they must be transferred through an extensive paperwork process each time the employee switches jobs, according to 401k.fidelity.com.

A Roth IRA, which stands for Individual Retirement Account, consists of deposits on which income tax already has been charged. When money is drawn out on the day the plan matures, no income tax is charged. Roth IRA plans are through independent sources and do not need to be moved if an employee switches jobs, according to www.ira.com.

"They are both investment vehicles that are often used as elements of compensation packages," Monica Woods, instructor of accounting, said.

Woods worked for several large businesses, including Sprint Nextel, before coming to K-State.

"Some companies allow you to start contributing immediately. Others have a six- or 12-month waiting period," she said. "When transferring a 401K, my best recommendation is that when you get your separation package. A mistake a lot of people make is withdrawing from these accounts before they mature."

Woods said there usually isn't a penalty if someone transfers the money into another 401K or other investment plan, but if a person liquidates the money, early withdrawal penalties can occur.

Another option for those looking to invest their hard-earned dollars are closed deposits, CDs, with their local bank.

Laura Doherty, personal banker at Community First National Bank, said banks offer many options on closed deposits, anywhere from three-month to five-year plans with a higher interest rate for the longer the money is put away.

"People get CDs for many different reasons," Doherty said. "They're a secured investment. You can basically have an investment that's insured if the bank fails for any reason up to a certain amount, and you receive a steady interest rate up until the time you choose."

Thank you for changing lives!

The All-University Campaign for KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

For the first time ever at K-State, the faculty and staff challenged each other to participate in a university-wide fundraising initiative as part of the $500 million Changing Lives Campaign. Over the life of this campaign, 43 percent of current K-State employees have made a gift. The "Join Us" challenge this fall inspired 16 percent of faculty and staff to make additional commitments. More than $12.5 million has been committed by current employees of K-State to the Changing Lives Campaign.

The College of Human Ecology had the highest participation rate among all colleges at 78 percent.

Our heartfelt thanks go to the 47 members of the campaign committee, and to everyone who participated. As faculty and staff, you are part of changing lives every day. Now, with your participation, you have sent a positive message of commitment to the friends and alumni who have been willing to invest in the student experience, faculty enhancement or facilities and technology through the Changing Lives Campaign.

All-University Campaign
Co-Chairmen Jackie Spears and Brian Spooner

"The true measure of our success as a Top 10 land-grant university is best exhibited by the caring and dedicated faculty and staff who share the vision to change lives at K-State. During the life of the campaign, all of you have stepped up in impressive numbers and provided more than $12.5 million to the most significant fundraising campaign in this university's history. I am very proud of your great support of K-State."

Jon Wefald, Ph.D., President

"I chose to contribute to the Changing Lives Campaign for the good feeling that came with giving a little something back to the institution — and the Division of Facilities — because they took a chance on me 24 years ago."

Loleta Sump, Manager, Facilities Support Services

"My family feels that the all-university component of the KSU Foundation's Changing Lives Campaign is a way to improve life right here where we live and work. Our participation positively impacts our programs, and that aspect of the campaign is very satisfying. There are so many needs all over the world today. Sometimes you can't even be sure your donation is making it to the people who are so desperate for help. But here, in our own academic community, we can rest assured the results of these efforts are being applied wisely. My wife and I see and appreciate that difference. We enthusiastically support the KSU Foundation, its goals and the future of K-State."

Gary Mortenson, Ph.D., Director,
Graduate Studies in Music, Trumpet, Brass Ensemble and Trumpet Ensemble, College of Arts and Sciences

"I established an endowed fund to support a graduate fellowship for a doctoral student in the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics. My desire is to impact the professional development of a doctoral student and give back to a university that has provided me significant opportunities to succeed as a faculty member and administrator. The majority of our graduate students' financial needs are not met through assistantships, thus the fellowship will help reduce the financial burden of the student while pursuing their Ph.D. Without the support I received from scholarships and fellowships, it would have been extremely challenging for me to complete my Ph.D. Participating in the Changing Lives Campaign provides faculty and staff an opportunity to make a difference in the lives of our students."

Carol Shanklin, Ph.D., Professor,
Hotel, Restaurant, Institution
Management and Dietetics,
College of Human Ecology, and Associate Dean, Graduate School

"The giving of faculty and staff to K-State demonstrates to the public that we believe in Kansas State University!"

Denis M. Medeiros, Ph.D., RD, Professor and Head, Department of Human Nutrition, and Interim Dean for Scholarship and Research, College of Human Ecology

"Financial support by faculty and staff is important because it gives us an opportunity to be even more vested in our work, and it sends a great message to the students that we care about them and the welfare of the university."

Jackie Toburen, Grounds Manager,
Facilities Services

"The response of faculty and staff to the All-University Campaign is yet one more indication of the special people we have here at K-State and the tremendous commitment of these individuals to K-State's success."

Ogden man arrested on drug charges

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department arrested an Ogden man on felony and misdemeanor charges, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

James Charles Goodridge was arrested Monday on charges including probation violation, possession of drug paraphernalia, contributing to a child's misconduct and possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver.

The charges of contributing to a child's misconduct stemmed from a passenger in the vehicle Goodridge was in when he was arrested, Quintanar said.

"It was because he had a 17-year-old in the vehicle when he was being charged with attempt to deliver," Quintanar said.

Bond was set at $11,000.

House approves minimum wage increase

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON D.C. — The Democratic-controlled House voted Wednesday to increase the federal minimum wage to $7.25 an hour, bringing America's lowest-paid workers a crucial step closer to their first raise in a decade.

The vote was 315-116, with more than 80 Republicans joining Democrats to pass it.

"You should not be relegated to poverty if you work hard and play by the rules," said House Majority Leader Steny Hoyer, D-Md.

The bill was the second measure passed since Democrats took control of the House.

The measure, which now goes to the Senate, would raise the federal wage floor by $2.10 from its current $5.15 an hour in three steps over 26 months.

Afghan officers, soldiers train at Ft. Riley to prepare for transition in power

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Afghan police officers and soldiers were in Kansas to participate in training at Fort Riley, and they toured the K-State Police Department as well as the Riley County Police Department, U.S. Navy Lt. j.g. Tal Young said.

"We are showing them the way the Afghans are doing things, so it won't be such a shock factor," Young said.

One of the motives behind the visit was to create a partnership between the Afghan soldiers and police and U.S. troops, so when the Afghan troops take over security for Afghanistan, they will be well prepared, Young said.

"There's a lot better light at the end of the tunnel," he said.

The Afghanistan contingent is staying at Fort Riley in the same area as the soldiers who are training to aid in the transition, said Master Sgt. Cameron Porter, supervisor 1st Infantry Division in the public affairs office.

The Afghans arrived Jan. 5 and will be at Fort Riley for 10 days, Porter said.

The training U.S. soldiers are receiving at Fort Riley lasts for 60 days, Porter said, and the 1st Infantry Division took over this transition training in November 2006.

The Afghan soldiers and police officers will receive 10 days of training.

Friends, family mourn death of longtime K-State security guard

Elizabeth Martin, mother of Michael Luse, wipes tears from her eyes while listening to "Amazing Grace" during a memorial for Luse. Luse died on Jan. 4 at the age of 57 of emphysema. More than 100 people attended the memorial Tuesday afternoon in his honor.

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A loud radio call broke the silence as the dispatcher requested, "Unit 79 please respond." There was no response.

Two more times, the voice inquired for the unit to respond. Finally, an officer replied, "Unit 79 is 10-7."

This was his last call.

K-State security guard Michael Patrick Luse was honored in a memorial service at All Faiths Chapel Tuesday afternoon. Luse died Jan. 4 of emphysema. He was 57.

The K-State Police performed the last call at the service to honor Luse. The response 10-7 means the unit is out of service for good.

More than 100 people paid their last respects to the man who was stationed as a security guard in the Veterinary Medicine Complex. Luse worked at K-State for 35 years.

Luse's brother, Paul Martin, shared some of his memories with the assembly.

"Mike had a heart as big as the outdoors," Martin said. "He had a joke or a smile for everybody. I never heard the man say one unkind word about anyone."

Many speakers during the service shared these sentiments and joked about how Luse was proud to be Irish.

"I don't know how many buttons or pins Mike had that said 'I'm Irish,' 'Kiss me, I'm Irish' and 'Erin Go Bragh,'" Martin said with a chuckle.

The service reflected Luse's love of his heritage with music like "Amazing Grace" performed by bagpipes and the popular Irish song, "Danny Boy."

Rick Howard, a friend of Luse's for 21 years, read Luse's eulogy.

"While he was not a tall man in stature, he was definitely a giant among men," he said.

Luse's height was caused by a curvature of the spine, a condition he had since birth, Martin said. As a child, Luse wore braces in the hope that he would grow out of it, Martin said.

However, Luse never did. The curve in Luse's spine caused his organs to be in abnormal positions in his body.

Ronnie Grice, campus police director, said Luse loved to work and was dedicated to his job despite his medical condition.

"Many times Mike would say, 'This job is my life,'" Grice said.

Luse is survived by his wife, Terry Luse and his mother, Elizabeth Ann Martin, Leawood, Kan.

A series of drawings by architect, educator and artist Larry Bowne are on display in the Chang Gallery in Seaton Hall until Jan. 12. The College of Architecture, Planning and Design is sponsoring the exhibit. The Chang Gallery is open to the public weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Student wins Marshall Scholarship

Lisa Kitten, senior in mechanical engineering, received the 2007 Marshall Scholarship, worth $35,000 per year for two or three years of study at any university in the United Kingdom. Kitten was one of 40 students nationwide to receive the scholarship and plans to attend Oxford University.

New online master's program

K-State is part of a new online master's degree program in community development. The program, which is the first of its kind, allows students to receive their master's degree while working or training. K-State is one of five universities nationally to provide this service.

Long John Silver's Sea Food Shoppe, 721 N. 3rd St., closed permanently Sunday evening with the drive-thru out of order and the sign unlit. Luis Legarreta, manager, said the problems could have been fixed but weren't because the restaurant would be closing regardless. The employees of the restaurant knew about two months ago the location would be closing because of the redevelopment project in downtown Manhattan, Legarreta said. He said they didn't know the exact date until two weeks before the closing, though. Legarreta said UR Foods, the company that owned the restaurant, has no plans to open another Long John Silver's in Manhattan.

Partnership to benefit athletes

Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student athletes across the nation have attracted academic attention because of a partnership with the NCAA and the National Academic Advising Association.

Roberta Flaherty, executive director for NACADA and the Dean of Education, said the partnership will focus on helping both on-campus advisers, athletic counselors and their staff understand the academic needs of student athletes.

"The NCAA, as part of its initiative, is to integrate the student athletes more into the academic environment of the institution," Flaherty said.

Training of campus faculty and staff will be through an online course opening next month. The course will cover the basics of academic advising and incorporate the rules and regulations of the NCAA, she said.

Flaherty said the course will help academic advisers make sure they're not infringing on the athlete's eligibility.

The first in-person institute is scheduled in May, she said.

"The NCAA will recommend teams that are having problems meeting their academic progress rates and graduation rates, so those institutions can send teams to better understand what an institution can do to help a student meet regulations," she said.

Jill Shields, associate director of student services with athletics, said student athletes have to find the balance of academics and athletics when they enter the collegiate level.

"Our academic learning center is a facility that helps in the transition with big time college athletics," Shields said.

She said she works with K-State student athletes on a daily basis to help make them successful in academics.

"We have intervention type programs," she said. "We work daily with different type programs with student athletes, whether it's assisting them with study skills, study tables, study groups or whatever it may be."

Myles Brand, president of the NCAA, and Jo Anne Huber, president of NACADA, announced the agreement in October 2006, according to a NCAA press release.

"The NCAA and NACADA share an interest in ensuring academic success for collegiate students," Brand said in the press release. "Just as strengthening the intercollegiate athletics connection with higher education is an ongoing goal of the NCAA and its member institutions, engaging campus academic advisers and personnel outside the athletics department is another important part of academic reform."

Mike Holen, Dean of Education, said the agreement is in its early stages, and while NACADA's executive office is at K-State, the organization is a separate unit and the partnership between the NCAA and NACADA does not include the university.

"We're highly supportive of the relationship, because we hope that our student athlete advisement programs will tie into this, and our faculty will be involved in developing some of the program aspects of it," he said.

Sympathy for Saddam

Media should show compassion toward former dictator for his actions

Did you feel the same anger I felt when reading the article "Military nurse sees softer side of Saddam," released by the Associated Press last week?

The article described interactions between Master Sgt. Robert Ellis, a military nurse, and the former dictator of Iraq, ranging from feeding birds bread crumbs to talking about Saddam's children. The article sympathized with Saddam to the fullest extent.

At first, I thought the article must have been talking about a different Saddam Hussein than the one I've learned about. That Saddam is responsible for the rape, torture and murder of millions of Iraqis and Iraqis. That Saddam "forgot" to tell weapons inspectors about the 500 barrels of chemical weapons the Department of Defense reported to have discovered in June 2006. That Saddam was himself a weapon of mass destruction.

I was wrong. While this might be an interesting story to some, to me it is frightening. I worry this article is one that could be the last you read about the dictator.

The things Saddam did throughout his life warrant no sympathy. What this article should have done was thank President Bush for capturing Saddam. Instead, what I find are articles and columns calling Bush an oil thirsty warmonger.

President Bush led the fight in Iraq, capturing Saddam Hussein, putting an end to his power. But we are facing a similar conflict today through the genocide occurring in the Darfur region of Sudan. According to the Coalition for International Justice, there have been more than 400,000 deaths in Darfur. For more than a year, Kansas' very own Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., has been pushing for an end to the genocide.

He's visited the region and pushed Congress to get more involved with distributing justice to those war criminals who have been involved with the genocide. We haven't heard much about Darfur until recently, despite Brownback's involvement. I believe the reason we are hearing about Darfur is because Academy Award-winner George Clooney is getting involved.

What would have happened if Bush sent troops to Darfur to fight the genocide? I imagine the reaction would be similar to when he sent troops into Iraq for the first time. Imagine what would have happened if Clooney became involved with the horrors Saddam committed against his country's people. It's possible we all would be cheering to bring him down and to end the genocide he created.

Were there articles that sympathized with Adolf Hitler? Saddam might not have had concentration camps, but I would say rape rooms take a pretty close second. I doubt there was ever an article that featured Hitler playing with squirrels in his yard.

So why is it acceptable to write an article portraying Saddam in that manner?

I'm not saying the press is unfair or unbalanced. By reporting a story showing a different side to a seemingly one-sided man is in itself quite fair and balanced.

However, I see no need for Americans to read a sympathetic article about a monster feeding breadcrumbs to birds days before his execution.

Perhaps the author of the article could have written a letter of thanks to the troops or to

Bush for all they have done in Iraq and in the Middle East to end the terror that has so long plagued the land.

More admirable contestants needed to better represent American women

Being bad never seemed so good, and that certainly is the case for Miss USA Tara Conner.

The 21-year-old beauty queen has been at the top of entertainment headlines since the exposure of her drinking and drug abuse in December. Since then, she has been shipped to rehab, and her every move has been scrutinized.

Now, she has an offer she cannot resist – a chance to pose with Playboy magazine.

Media mogul Donald Trump, owner of the Miss USA pageant, announced Jan. 5 on "Access Hollywood" that Playboy has put the offer on the table, and it's something he is seriously considering.

"Most people would say 'absolutely not, don't even' – I am thinking about it," Trump said. "We have brought the beauty pageants into the modern age; these are beautiful women."

What impresses me most is when Conner needed serious help, Trump and the Miss Universe Organization overlooked her glaring flaws and let her keep the title when other qualified contestants legitimately should be in her tiara.

Rosie O'Donnell, co-host of "The View," threw verbal daggers at Trump, saying he should have asked Conner to resign.

"Left the first wife, had an affair, left the second wife, had an affair. Had kids both times, but he's the moral compass for 20-year-olds in America," O'Donnell stated in an Associated Press report.

When I think of beauty pageants, I can't help but judge. True, these women are quite amazing, with the sculpted bodies of goddesses and a considerable amount of talent.

They are supposed to be the ideal woman, representing those who are rich and poor, black and white. They are, in some sense, perfect.

A Playboy pinup, however, would not represent women, let alone the Miss Universe Organization, accurately. It is not OK to loosen our morals and stick with a less-than-ideal candidate.

Yes, it's true; times have changed since Miss USA was established in 1952. Perhaps it is more acceptable to have a contestant enjoy a drink or two, or even tell a dirty joke.

But while Conner has serious issues and has yet to resolve them, she should not represent our country, especially at the top. Donald Trump and the Miss Universe Organization are dead wrong in their decision to keep Conner in her role.

The ideal Miss USA lies in a woman who is just like you or me; a woman who hasn't had breast augmentation, a drug addiction or an eating disorder. She should embody characteristics that are real, not enhanced, and she should be intelligent and well-spoken.

Unlike most beauty contestants, the average American woman is 5 feet 4 inches tall, weighs 152 pounds, is single, has two children and has earned a high school education, according to a March 2006 U.S. Census Bureau release.

Why do we need to stray away from average women who already are so great? Since when is it so bad to be normal?

The decisions made by the Miss Universe Organization endorse an image that is both degrading to women and the contestants.

It would be nice to see pageants like Miss USA return to being real: choosing real women to represent a real standard, not an oversexed pinup.

We need real role models today more than ever. We need more women to whom we can look and be proud.

TO THE POINT

An editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Unsigned comments left Collegian open to legal action; new format allows readers to get credit for comments

The Fourum isn't dead; it's just gone to a better place.

Rather than receiving comments by phone, we're now asking that you send them via your K-State e-mail.

This is not, as some have alleged, a moustache-twirling scheme to deny students a voice. In fact, we plan on reviving the beast.

When initially conceived, the Fourum allowed readers to make pertinent commentary on current events and the content of the paper.

However, its anonymous nature permitted the feature to devolve into the ugly cousin that eats all the food at family reunions.

The blessed sovereigns of Fourum yore did not intend for their creation to become a place of name-calling and vulgarity. There were occasions when merely listening to Fourum comments merited a vigorous bath.

Though the current staff members diligently walk their posts, the occasional intruder slips through.

When this happens, it not only demeans the publication and the university, it puts members of the Collegian and the paper itself at risk of litigation. Professors, professionals and the Student Press Law Center have advised us to get rid of it for years for that very reason.

Readers lost interest in the Fourum last semester, too. We had an average of only four comments per day, proving that people felt it wasn't worth contributing.

However, we still want to provide a place for students to voice their opinions.

The new system will provide an online system of signed comments. This way, the Collegian will be able to select the best comments each week for publication, giving due credit to the ones who contributed.

As one of the voices of K-State, we are committed to allowing the students and faculty a place to joke, gripe and sing praise to hairy martial artists. But to protect our university and ourselves we are mandating that people own up to their comments.

For now, the Forum – now spelled without the "u" – will be a weekly construct. However, if we get enough responses, we'd be happy to restore it to daily publication.

Please tell us what you think about this new policy. Comments may be e-mailed to forum@spub.ksu.edu. Anonymous comments will not be considered.

Meet the president

Wefald's efforts to improve K-State garner national attention

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jon Wefald has been the president of K-State for more than two decades. During this time he has received accolades nationally and locally for his devotion to the improvement of the university.

Wefald began his tenure at K-State in 1986. In his time at K-State, the university has experienced growth in both its academic and athletic programs.

During his time in office, K-State has added two million square-feet of new university buildings, including the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, Hale library and Throckmorton Hall. Also, enrollment has increased from 16,000 to more than 23,000, according to K-State media relations.

One of Wefald's objectives is to serve the student population, so he spends a lot of time on campus in areas where students can see and talk to him, said Robert Shoop, professor in educational leadership.

Wefald eats lunch almost every day at the K-State Student Union, where he also attends several meetings.

Shoop wrote a book about Wefald's accolades, "A University Renaissance: Jon Wefald's Presidency at Kansas State."

"I think his main goal is to serve the students, and to do that, he feels he need to know the students," Shoop said. "He has an absolute passion for what's in the best interest for the students and faculty."

Wefald also is instrumental in the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, athletic director Tim Weiser said.

"He is the only president of a university that I know that embraces athletics in a way that suggests he understands what a stellar athletic program does for a university," Weiser said.

Wefald cheers at games, takes pictures at practices and even threw a football around at one of the preseason practices. He also has been known to dine with potential recruits.

"It was probably the biggest dinner I ever had," said Michael Beasley, the nation's top-rated basketball recruit who signed to play for K-State next season. "He's a real cool guy. I think he really wants what's best for the team and school."

Because of his work at K-State, Wefald has been featured in publications ranging from USA Today to the Christian Science Monitor.

USA Today called his tenure the "True Miracle in Manhattan." Sports Illustrated ranked him as one of the top university presidents for an athletic director to work for, saying his decision to hire Bill Snyder was the event that saved K-State football.

"He has an undeniable love for our teams," Weiser said. "It is a great feeling to know he supports what we do. It makes my job a lot easier."

New dean hopes to expand facilities for College of Human Ecology

By Dustin Sanborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Virginia Moxley was named Dean of the College of Human Ecology after serving as the interim dean since January 2006.

Before becoming dean of the college, Moxley served as the associate dean of the college. She was also the interim head of the Department of Apparel and Textiles in 1993-94, and Hotel and Restaurant

Institution Management and Dietetics between 2001 and 2002.

She worked at K-State for more than 21 years. Moxley also has served as senior associate dean for scholarship and research in the college.

As the senior associate dean, she helped establish K-State's second-largest distance education program and fostered many partnerships outside of the college.

"Two things I hope to accomplish as the new dean are to increase internationalization of academic programs in the college and expand facilities," Moxley said.

To expand, private funding is necessary, Moxley said.

"An architecture firm is on contract to make renderings of the new buildings," Moxley said. "Visualizing the new buildings could then draw interest for funding."

According to the news release, Moxley will oversee the three departments of the college and monitor K-State research and extension programs in the Department of Family and Consumer Sciences, five centers, three institutes, one museum, development initiatives and academic partnerships.

"Virginia has tremendous support from faculty and alumni," said Provost M. Duane Nellis.

"She has vision and energy to take the college to new levels of success."

Huggins points to poor shooting, lack of endurance as clues to Wildcats' woes

By Jonathan Garten
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Coach Bob Huggins scanned the final stats sheet during the press conference Monday night following a 62-52 loss to Texas Tech.

Throughout the interview, Huggins used numbers to explain why K-State has lost three games in a row.

Why did the Wildcats shoot 30 percent from the field?

The box score showed seniors Cartier Martin and Akeem Wright combined to make five of 23 shots.

"If we gave Jason (Bennett) 11 shots, he'd probably make more than two," Huggins said. "If we gave Luis (Colon) 11 shots, he'd probably make more than two."

When asked if his team was tired during the last few minutes of the game when Texas Tech pulled ahead, Huggins compared the number of minutes the Red Raiders' starters played.

"If we were tired, (Jarrius) Jackson should have been exhausted, because he played 40 minutes," Huggins said. "(Charlie) Burgess played 39. (Martin) Zeno played 34. Why are we tired, and they're not?"

Junior forward David Hoskins sunk a pair of free throws with six minutes left to cut the Red Raiders' lead to 47-43, but from there Texas Tech pulled away.

K-State needs to find more high-percentage shots

By Jeffrey Rake
 KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Freshman Bill Walker walked gingerly around the K-State bench in a gray sweat suit just hours after it was announced he would miss the rest of the season with an anterior cruciate ligament injury to his left knee.

He watched helplessly as his team suffered its third straight defeat, this one coming to Texas Tech in front of a national audience on ESPN's Big Monday.

The Wildcats shot an unimpressive 30 percent from the field, were unable to get into any offensive rhythm and — during one stretch in the first half — went nearly nine minutes without making a basket.

With Walker and his 11.3 points-per-game average on the bench, the Wildcats will have no choice but to turn to their seniors.

Nobody knows that more than Walker, who had hoped to come in and take his team to the NCAA tournament for the first time since 1996.

If Monday night's performance is an indicator, the Wildcats might be in trouble.

Senior Cartier Martin, K-State's leading scorer, shot 2-of-11 for just six points. Senior Akeem Wright made 3-of-12 attempts. Senior Lance Harris didn't register a single point and fifth-year student Jermaine Maybank played sloppily in limited action.

The problem so far this season has been making shots, and the Wildcats haven't made enough of them. Coach Bob Huggins made it clear who needs to step up for his team.

"Your seniors have to carry you," Huggins said. "I've been doing this a long, long time, and I know when you're good, your seniors are good."

So what can the Wildcats do to become more productive offensively? They can start by working deeper into the shot clock and not forcing the first open shot, or by forgetting about the three-point line for a while.

The Wildcats made only 2-of-15 3-point attempts against Texas Tech — six of those misses belonged to Martin.

Martin, who has been stuck in a shooting slump, should not be settling for the lowest-percentage shot in the game, especially when he attempted just four shots in the paint and made only one trip to the free throw line.

It should come as no surprise that David Hoskins — who made 7-of-10 free throw attempts — was the leading scorer with 23 points. He did most of his damage around the basket.

The Wildcats eventually will find their shot, but until that time comes, they should follow Hoskins' lead and settle for the easy ones.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

K-State's David Hoskins goes up for a shot against a Texas Tech defender at Bramlage Coliseum. Hoskins had 23 points in the Wildcats 62-52 loss to the Red Raiders.

Upperclassmen must shine for Wildcats to be successful

Bill Walker went out of his way to meet with Texas Tech coach Bob Knight near the locker rooms Monday night in Bramlage Coliseum after the Red Raider men's basketball team defeated K-State 62-52.

My initial response to seeing this exchange was how much I would have liked to see those two meet for the first time after Walker put up 20 points and 10 rebounds in a K-State victory.

Unfortunately that didn't happen, and it won't any time soon because Walker is out for the season after rupturing his anterior cruciate ligament in last Saturday's 69-65 loss at Texas A&M.

K-State struggled on both ends of the court in its first game without its star freshman, giving up easy baskets to the Red Raiders and only shooting 30 percent from the field.

Now K-State is 0-2 in Big 12 Conference play, and the season is in danger of slipping away unless the Wildcats can find some way of bouncing back after losing Walker.

If they want any chance of reaching the NCAA tournament for the first time since 1996, they will need the seniors to step up.

Looking at the Texas Tech game makes you wonder what happened to the team's seniors.

Cartier Martin came into the game leading the team in scoring with 14.7 points per game, and Lance Harris and Akeem Wright were third and fourth, respectively.

These three players went a combined 5-for-25 from the field and missed all 10 of their three-point attempts. Together, they had just 13 points.

Junior forward David Hoskins scored 23 points, and was the only Wildcat to score more than seven.

Huggins has stressed all season that all of his great teams from the past had one common theme, senior leadership, and this team will need all of its seniors to take their game to the next level.

"Your seniors have to carry you; your seniors have to make shots for you, and your seniors have to get rebounds for you," Huggins said after the loss to the Red Raiders. "Should we depend on our freshman to score our points and get our rebounds for us? It's not fair to him."

When it comes to making the post-season, Huggins knows what he is talking about. He made the NCAA Tournament 14 years in a row at Cincinnati, and his teams have made a post-season berth for 17 consecutive years.

The Wildcats will need to rely on their seniors and continue relying on Hoskins to lead this team to victories.

Can they do it? Of course. But will they? Now that's a different story.

FBC | K-State hires McGriff to coach defensive backs

Kansas State named Wesley McGriff defensive backs coach and promoted Tim Tibesar to defensive coordinator Wednesday, football coach Ron Prince announced.

Prince

McGriff and Tibesar will assume duties previously held by Raheem Morris, who recently accepted an offer to return to the Tampa Bay Buccaneers as the organization's defensive backs coach.

Morris held several coaching positions with the Bucs from 2002-05 and served as an assistant defensive backs coach at Tampa Bay prior to accepting the position of defensive coordinator/defensive backs coach at K-State.

McGriff comes to K-State from Baylor, where he served as the Bears' recruiting coordinator and cornerbacks coach under Guy Morris for the past four seasons.

McGriff has coached student-athletes on both sides of the ball during his 17-year career, including two stints as a defensive coordinator. McGriff will have plenty to work with when he arrives at K-State as the Wildcat secondary is expected to return a number of players with starting experience, including second team All-Big 12 safety Marcus Watts, safety Andrew Erker and cornerbacks Justin McKinney, Bryan Baldwin, Joshua Moore and Byron Garvin. K-State also added one of the nation's top junior college defensive backs in NJCAA All-American Gary Chandler from Coffeyville (Kan.) Community College during the early signing period in December.

Prior to beginning his stint at Baylor in 2003, McGriff spent two seasons on Morris' Kentucky staff, coaching the running backs during the 2001 season before returning to the defensive side of the ball as UK's cornerbacks coach for 2002.

K-State will be one of four schools in the country to appear on the new ABC series, "Chase Card Services Presents FREE Ticket: Inside College Basketball," which premieres at 2 p.m. Saturday, Jan. 13.

Created and produced by Intersport, the production team followed the Wildcats for a seven-day stretch beginning with their preparations for the Xavier game on Wednesday, Jan. 2 and concluding with the "Big Monday" game with Texas Tech on Monday, Jan. 8.

The show complete access to all practices and meetings and performed one-on-one interviews with coach Bob Huggins and numerous players and staff. In addition to its premiere on ABC Sports Saturday, the episode featuring K-State will be broadcast four other times, including 1 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 1 on ESPN2 and 9:30 p.m. Saturday, Jan. 20, 10:30 p.m. Sunday, Jan. 21 and 4 a.m. Wednesday, Jan. 24 on ESPN.

Created as an extension of Chase Card Services' Freedom campaign, "Chase Card Services Presents FREE Ticket: Inside College Basketball" will offer fans unprecedented access behind closed doors, capturing all aspects of the college basketball experience — from practice and meetings to team travel and campus life.

The series, which will consist of eight half-hour episodes, also will feature Connecticut, Indiana and Texas A&M in later shows.

Show Dates:

ABC Sports — 2 p.m. Saturday, Jan. 13
 ESPN — 9:30 p.m. Saturday, Jan. 20
 ESPN — 10:30 p.m. Sunday, Jan. 21
 ESPN — 4 a.m. Wednesday, Jan. 24
 ESPN2 — 1 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 1

REC | Rec Services offers weight loss program for students

Recreational Services personal trainers will sponsor a health program called Lucky Loser starting this month geared toward helping overweight K-State students lose body fat.

For $40, students with a body mass index of 25 or more can sign up for the 7-week program. Students can register starting today at the service desk of the Peters Recreation Complex.

The first meeting will be from 6-8 p.m. Jan. 24.

Participants will attend a 30-minute nutrition session from 6:30-7 p.m. or 7-7:30 p.m. on Tuesdays. They also will receive a 1-hour workout session led by a personal trainer either 6:45-7:45 p.m. on Mondays or 5:45-6:45 p.m. Wednesdays.

The student who loses the largest percentage of body fat at the end of the program will win six free sessions with a personal trainer.

Bush to send 21,500 to Iraq

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush acknowledged for the first time Wednesday that he erred by not ordering a military buildup in Iraq last year and said he was increasing U.S. troops by 21,500.

"Where mistakes have been made, the responsibility rests with me," Bush said.

The buildup puts Bush on a collision course with the new Democratic Congress and pushes the American troop presence in Iraq toward its highest level. It also runs counter to widespread anti-war passions among Americans and the advice of some top generals.

In a prime-time address to the nation, Bush pushed back against the Democrats' calls to end the unpopular war.

"To step back now would force a collapse of the Iraqi government, tear that country apart and result in mass killings on an unimaginable scale," Bush said. "If we increase our support at this crucial moment and help the Iraqis break the current cycle of violence, we can hasten the day our troops begin coming home."

After nearly four years of combat, the speech was perhaps Bush's last chance to try to present a winning strategy in Iraq and persuade Americans to change their minds about the war, which has cost the lives of more than 3,000 members of the U.S. military and more than $400 billion.

"Our past efforts to secure Baghdad failed for two principal reasons: there were not enough Iraqi and American troops to secure neighborhoods that had been cleared of terrorists and insurgents," the president said, "and there were too many restrictions on the troops we did have."

He said American commanders have reviewed the Iraqi plan "to ensure that it addressed these mistakes."

Bush cited the government's latest optimistic estimate.

"To establish its authority, the Iraqi government plans to take responsibility for security in all of Iraq's provinces by November," he said. "If the Iraqi government does not follow through on its promises, it will lose the support of the American people, and it will lose the support of the Iraqi people."

Bush warned the strategy would bring more violence.

"Even if our new strategy works exactly as planned, deadly acts of violence will continue, and we must expect more Iraqi and American casualties," he said. "The question is whether our new strategy will bring us closer to success. I believe that it will."

BELARUS WITHDRAWS TAX ON RUSSIAN OIL

MINSK, Belarus — Russian oil began flowing again through a Belarusian pipeline late Wednesday, a top Belarusian oil official said. It marked the resolution of a dispute between the countries that had disrupted supplies to Eastern Europe as well to the former Soviet Republic.

Alexei Kostuchenko, general director of pipeline concern Gornetransneft-Druzhba, said Russian oil entered the Belarusian system at around 10:30 p.m. local time Wednesday.

It was being pumped to Poland, Germany, Ukraine, Slovakia, the Czech Republic and Hungary. Kostuchenko did not give any information about the volume of oil being moved.

The spat between the two formerly close, ex-Soviet republics showcased the Belarus regime's reliance on cheap Russian energy imports and stoked doubts in European capitals about Russia and its dependability as an energy supplier.

Sorority members find bat in Kappa Delta house

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Residents of the Kappa Delta sorority house discovered a bat in a sleeping dormitory on Dec. 17.

Critter Control, a pest control business, was called to remove the bat from the house, 1220 Centennial Dr.

Todd Olson, owner and operator of the business, said he arrived on the scene to investigate the situation.

Olsen removed the bat from the house and took it to be euthanized.

"We did not test the bat (for diseases), but we will be taking those steps in the future every time we encounter this situation," Olson said.

Olsen said he is taking precautions to ensure the bats do not return.

"We have two main ideas of where the bat came in, and we closed them both off," he said.

"In case there are more bats in there, we put up a bat valve, which allows the bats to escape the attic but does not allow for re-entry."

Olson also said guano, or bat droppings, was discovered on the roof. The valve was placed near where the droppings had been found.

The bat that was a Little Brown bat species, Olson said, which are common in Kansas.

"We have been very impressed with the service that has been provided to us," said Sara Pound, house corporation manager for the local chapter of Kappa Delta.

"They have been extremely thorough in looking over the rest of the house for evidence of bats."

Pound said the company will return during spring break to see if more bats have congregated in the house.

Pound said there was no reason to be concerned about rabies. The girls who lived in the dorm where the bat was discovered could have the option to receive rabies vaccinations, but none were required, he said.

Lafene Health Center provided an information sheet about rabies and how the virus can be contracted.

Bluegrass in the Birdhouse

Acoustic performer to open new season of music series

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Singer and songwriter Darcie Deaville will perform at 8 p.m. Friday at the Manhattan Arts Center, 1520 Poyntz Ave.

The concert is part of the BirdHouse Acoustic Music Series, which has brought acoustic musicians to the arts center for the past 12 years.

Deaville will sing original songs and accompany her vocals by playing fiddle, mandolin, octave mandolin and a variety of other stringed instruments. This will be her debut in the BirdHouse Series.

"I look for it to be a foot-stomping, high-energy show," said Robert Bear, booking agent for the series and biology instructor at K-State. "She plays a fun, fast-paced style of bluegrass that I think the crowd will enjoy."

Deaville, a Toronto native now living in Austin, Texas, has recorded four albums. Her last album, "Darcie Deaville Plays the Fiddle and Sings," came out in 2003. Her other albums include "Tornado in Slo Mo," "Ways to Fly Gillman Deaville" and her debut, "Last Hitchhiker on the Lost Highway."

According to her Web site, Deaville spent time as a member of other musical acts like Tom Paxton and Ani DiFranco, on stage and in the recording studio.

"I'm a fan of her old music, but she has a new album coming out in the spring, and I would think she'll be playing mostly those songs on Friday night," Bear said.

Deaville also is a playwright and author. Her work on stage includes her own one-woman musical, "Tornado in Slo Mo," and performances in several musicals in Austin and one on Broadway in New York City. She recently published "Twinkle, Twinkle Fiddle Star," a book about learning to play the fiddle.

"We really look forward to having her this weekend," Bear said. "She's a very talented person, and I think the arts center will provide a good atmosphere for her to perform."

Steve Martini, associate director of the Peters Recreation Complex, said he agreed.

"The arts center is a very small, very intimate atmosphere for music," said Martini, who helped found the series. He said the small space is ideal for musicians.

"It's a great place for acoustic performers to play shows. And being such a small venue allows the audience to feel more connected to the musician."

Tickets to the concert are $16 for adults, $14 for military, $13 for students and $7 for children.

According to the arts center Web site upcoming acts in the series include: Jeff Black on Feb. 9, Carrie Newcomer on Mar. 30, and The Wilders on Apr. 20.

TRAINING | Afghan soldiers tour Manhattan area

"They're basically going through a condensed version of the training," Porter said.

The training the Afghan soldiers are going through is going to greatly help them in the future, said Maj. David Carey, one of the trainers embedded with the Afghan soldiers.

"It's a fantastic opportunity for them," he said.

Twenty-seven Afghan national police toured the campus police department and RCPD, and learned valuable information to take back to Afghanistan, said Col. Mohamed Aref, Chief of Narcotics in Kabul, through an interpreter for the U.S. Army, Ahmad Elyassi.

The Afghan officers saw the procedures and facilities the RCPD had available and will use that information when they return to Afghanistan, Aref said.

"We will go with full hands," Aref said.

The Afghan visitors also toured the Custer House at Fort Riley, Young said.

Many of the impressions of the United States were from movies and of large cities, so the Afghan soldiers and police officers were surprised at Kansas and Fort Riley, Young said.

"The landscape here isn't that much different from Afghanistan," Young said, who said he spent four months there.

Aref said he would go back to Afghanistan and tell what he had seen and of people the met, and said he hoped the information learned at the police stations and at Fort Riley would help the Afghan people.

"More than anything, the people in Afghanistan are in need of safety and security," Aref said.

HUGGINS | Coach looks for answers to losses

were either layups or free throws. In the last eight minutes, they attempted just four jump shots.

The Wildcats didn't finish quite as strong. They turned the ball over three times and missed six jump shots in the final six minutes.

"We just couldn't get a stop," Hoskins said. "When we needed to get a basket, we turned it over. When they needed a basket, they got layups."

The win gave Red Raider coach Bob Knight 882 career victories. On Jan. 1, he passed former North Carolina coach Dean Smith for the most wins in Division I men's basketball with his 880th victory.

Hoskins led the Wildcats with 23 points. Instead of settling for jumpers like many of his teammates, he did most of his damage in the lane, where he made four layups and drew several fouls.

K-State's prior losses were to Xavier, 76-66, on Jan. 3 and Texas A&M, 69-65, on Jan. 6.

Before the loss to Xavier, the Wildcats won six games in a row. Their last win was a 72-56 victory over New Mexico on Dec. 23 for the championship of the Las Vegas Classic.

K-State announced before the game that star freshman forward Bill Walker would miss the rest of the season after rupturing his anterior cruciate ligament against Texas A&M. Walker ranked third on the team in scoring with 11.3 points per game and third on the team in rebounding with 4.5 per game.

"We spent a lot of time trying to incorporate Bill, and then we lose Bill," Huggins said. "Now we're back to where we were, but that's not an excuse."

London band makes excellent sophomore album

"The Warning"

★★★★☆

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Year-end, best-of lists are some of the main reasons I look forward to winter break. It allows me time to catch up on some releases I forgot about during the year, reaffirm my taste in the year's best and find hidden gems that managed to slip under my radar.

London electro-pop quintet Hot Chip is one sweet morsel in which I indulged over this past break. But unlike other delicious tidbits I downed over break which caused me temporarily to go up a belt-loop size, "The Warning," Hot Chip's second album, offers listeners a full variety of disparate musical styles and emotions the band manages to combine into a cohesive whole that won't cause aural indigestion.

According to its Myspace.com Web page, Hot Chip began recording music because the members felt music, pop music especially, had become very bland. Thus these five friends with an extremely wide array of musical influences ranging from Phil Spector and the Beach Boys to Aphex Twin and Prince set out with four keyboards and a drum machine, holed themselves in band member Joe Goddard's bedroom and created a debut.

"Coming on Strong," released in 2005, received lukewarm criticism due to the band's apparent lack of focus. But it seems within a few months, Hot Chip mastered its art of creating genre-mashing, bedroom pop with "The Warning."

Opening with an ambient, Brian Eno-like synth, the first track, "Careful," quickly morphs into a loopy drum-and-bass track that careens forward, stopping only once at the two-minute mark to catch its breath before stuttering out at song's end.

Are you catching Basketball Fever?

Cure it! Follow your new Kansas State Wildcats and your Champion Lady Cats in the Tipoff Section!

"And I Was a Boy from School" easily is one of the best singles of the year. Over a simple hi-hat beat, a churning bass line and spinning synth figure, vocalist Alexis Taylor weaves a song about two unfortunate misfits who befriend one another simply because every other person has turned their backs to them.

After a beautiful Air-like synthesizer bridge, the hi-hat leaves and toy xylophones enter, and the song concludes in a very meandering, but ultimately fitting, fashion.

The first single, "Over and Over," best illustrates the help given to Hot Chip's sound by production duo Tim Goldsmith and James Murphy (the DFA). The song starts a groove from the ground up, beginning with, of all things, a wind chime. Quickly the listener is taken away by a bouncy synth line and a rubbery bass groove so catchy it would make "Speaking in Tongues"-era David Byrne blush. After a brief funky breakdown at three minutes, a hair-raising guitar line enters and takes the song into a completely different direction while the band still uses the groove with which the song started.

"(Just Like We) Break-down" is a Middle-Eastern-tinged, trance-like tune, which is a nice comedown after the manic energy of "Over and Over."

Perhaps the best moment on "The Warning" is the song "Look After Me." In it, Taylor abandons all ironic posturing present in previous songs on the album. Gentle synthesizer burbles and a light drum machine beat hover beneath Taylor as he spills his guts for his audience and the person to whom the song is aimed. When he sings, "Every time I see your face I break down and cry," it is one of the most heart-wrenching moments I've heard in some time.

Hot Chip is an electro-pop quintet hailing from London. Members are Felix Martin, Al Doyle, Owen Clarke, Joe Goddard and Alexis Taylor. The band's sophomore album, "The Warning" was one of the most heralded releases of 2006.

Just as Taylor lets us into his world, he immediately pushes us back out with the album's title track. Taylor spins twisty lyrics like, "Excuse me sir, I'm lost; I'm looking for a place where I can get lost," over simple IDM beats.

Final track "No Fit State" is another album highlight. Sounding like the long lost cousin of a New Order song, the track slowly builds tension through a tightly strummed guitar and rising synthesizer flourishes. The tension breaks to a canon-like section over which Taylor wryly sings, "I'm in no fit state/shape ... to fall in love with you ... to make a record of my life ... to drink out of your cup." The track is a solid summation of the preceding material.

Listening to Hot Chip's "The Warning" has convinced me the band has completed its goal of making imaginative pop music — challenging, yet accessible — that will affect and inspire anyone lucky enough to come into earshot of this solid sophomore effort.

Sebelius unveils $12.39 billion budget proposal

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Kathleen Sebelius is proposing a $12.39 billion state budget for the coming year that includes increases in higher education and social services and money for the second year of a three-year public schools plan.

Budget director Duane Goossen told reporters Thursday the budget includes several items the state must fund.

Goossen said the proposal does not include money to expand health insurance coverage for all Kansans, although Sebelius said in her State of the State address Wednesday, Kansas should work toward universal health coverage for all residents.

Under the proposed budget, the state would spend slightly more than $6 billion in general fund revenue in 2008, an increase of $429 million from the current budget year. The second year of the three-year school plan accounts for about $200 million of the increase, including $15 million to begin a five-year implementation of all-day kindergarten.

The rest of the $12.39 billion budget would come from federal funds.

Instead of a plan to cover all 293,000 Kansans without coverage, Sebelius is repeating a proposal from 2006 that the state provide coverage to all children from birth to age 5, at a cost of $4 million to the state. Goossen said the governor was leaving it up to legislators and the Kansas Health Policy Authority to figure out how to handle her health care challenge.

"We will spend some time studying her funding suggestions before deciding whether her ideas are not only something Kansans can afford, but something they want from their state government," said House Speaker Melvin Neufeld, R-Ingalls.

Senate Majority Leader Derek Schmidt was disappointed in the budget, saying projections show the state could run through its current $700 million in reserves in two years.

"I thought that we might have a more honest discussion about what it takes to responsibly govern the state," said Schmidt, R-Independence.

Rep. Bill Feuerborn, D-Garnett and ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, was more generous, calling it a "no-frills" budget. Expanding health coverage for children should be a priority, he said, calling Sebelius' proposal a "baby step."

"I would hope that it has a better chance with the way the elections have gone and a little more moderate House," he said.

Despite picking up five seats, Democrats are outnumbered by Republicans 78-47 in the House and 30-10 in the Senate.

Although the budget doesn't include any money to reduce a $727 million backlog of maintenance projects at the six state university campuses, it does include plans to increase the operating budgets of universities, community colleges and vocational schools by $40 million. The bulk of that would be directed toward salary increases.

Sebelius is expected to make a separate announcement on fixing some 560 university buildings and infrastructure later this month.

Craigslist provides online options for classified ads for community

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As faces new and old descend upon the Little Apple for another semester, new modes of communication are available now that Manhattan has its own craigslist Web site.

"Craigslist is a collection of local classifieds and forums for over 450 cities worldwide," said Susan MacTavish Best, public relations representative for craigslist. "The sites are community-moderated and mainly free."

The original craigslist Web site, www.craigslist.org, began in 1995 in San Francisco at the hands of designer Craig Newmark. A free-Internet advocate, Newmark designed the original site not for immediate profit, but for what his mission statement said was a service mission with a nonprofit culture.

"We put our users first," Best said. "They are our number-one priority. We are in a fortunate position where we are a small, private, profitable company that does not need to meet the demands of Wall Street, and so with that, we are able to put our users first at all times."

More than 15 million people worldwide use a local version of craigslist, and according to Alexa navigation, it is the Internet's ninth-most popular English-language site. Reasons for using the service are individual to any given user, but the site includes job postings, real estate, romance, advice and a variety of goods and services.

"Just about anything can be found on this site," said Jeff Taylor, sophomore in open option. "It's kind of a one-stop shop."

Visitors can navigate through more than 40 discussion forums ranging in topics from local politics to celebrities. Other opportunities include house-swap information and a calendar of free local classes.

"The nicest thing is that you can customize the site to whatever works best for you," Taylor said. "Also, if you want to put in the extra effort, you can find things a lot cheaper."

Those interested in using craigslist do not face many financial obstacles, as all noncorporate postings are free. Corporate listings are kept at low, fixed prices, which have enticed several Manhattan advertisers.

"We began advertising with craigslist last month when a sales position opened up," said Traci Vaughn, store manager for Piercing Pagoda in the Manhattan Town Center. "So far we think we've received more response than a newspaper listing would have given. If this trend continues, there would be no reason to change."

Critics of craigslist argue the site is sporadic and lacks the efficiency of a newspaper's classified section. Others say the average person is not ready to make a computer their primary source of information.

K-State PROUD campaign is for students, by students

By Dustin Sanborn
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students have developed the PROUD campaign this semester for the student body as an extension of the Changing Lives campaign.

"Alumni and faculty have already been involved in the Changing Lives campaign," said Andrew Ellis, committee chair for Student Foundation and junior in political science. "Students wanted to get involved."

After a $10 donation to the campaign, students will receive a black K-State T-shirt. Campaign Week begins Feb. 12th and ends the 19th on the Monday of the K-State-Kansas game.

The black T-shirt is the official student shirt for the ESPN Big Monday game against the Jayhawks.

According to K-State PROUD's informational pamphlet, it is the first all-university campaign of its kind. The campaign is designed for students to have a part in K-State's Changing Lives campaign. The Changing Lives Campaign was developed with a goal to reach the $500 million mark, all of which would go back to K-State.

"Student foundation came up with the idea at fall retreat and formed an advisory board," said Jenna Kennedy, co-chair of the Campaign Advisory Board and senior in microbiology.

"The money collected during campaign week will be given to students who have exhausted all other financial aid sources," she said.

Money collected will be administered through student life. The response to the campaign will determine how much money can be given back to the students.

"The money will be used for a Student Opportunity Award," Ellis said.

Even though the campaign has an adviser, he takes on a nontraditional role.

"I think it's an incredible statement about students who want to help fellow students," said Jake Worcester, director of Development for Leadership Studies and adviser for the Student Foundation. "I am basically here for support because this program is totally student-run. They have really taken the ball and run with it."

This money will be used for student scholarships, fa-

Biology professor receives Commerce Bank award

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An assistant biology professor received recognition for her work with minority students at K-State.

A committee awarded Lorena Passarelli the 2007 Commerce Bank Presidential Faculty and Staff Award for Distinguished Services to Historically Under-represented Students. The award comes with a $2,500 prize.

"She really works with students, and she is a role model as a minority herself," said Brian Spooner, professor of biology and director of the Division of Biology.

"Dr. Passarelli has put together a research team in her lab that provides opportunities for people of a diverse background. She cares about all populations of students, women, minorities and the majority population."

Passarelli pushes her students to succeed inside and outside the classroom, Spooner said.

"She helps them to become professional and provides them with confidence," he said. "She encourages them to apply for scholarships. Many of her students end up going to medical school, graduate school or both."

Erica Cain, senior in microbiology, has worked with Passarelli since her sophomore year. She said Passarelli provides a comfortable classroom environment.

"With her, you can make mistakes and it's not the end of the world," Cain said. "She's not intimidating."

Cain said Passarelli played a big part in her decision to go to graduate school.

As a first-generation college student with a lot of financial responsibilities, Cain said she did not see graduate school as an option for herself.

"Dr. Passarelli opened my eyes to the fact that there are so many opportunities available to me if I just look and work hard," Cain wrote in her nomination letter for Passarelli. "The fact that I am even applying to graduate school can be attributed to the mentorship of Dr. Passarelli."

Passarelli said her students' hard work contributed to her winning the award.

"I've had very good students," Passarelli said. "The under-represented students I have mentored have been outstanding and made my mentoring job very easy."

The Biology Graduate Student Association presented Passarelli with its first Outstanding Graduate Faculty Award, and she also received the Haymaker and Stamey teaching awards.

The Commerce Bank Presidential Faculty and Staff Award for Distinguished Services to Historically Under-represented Students was established in 1978 to recognize K-State faculty and staff who make outstanding contributions to the education of minority students.

The selection committee consists of 15 members of the K-State faculty, staff and student organization presidents who chose from a pool of candidates nominated by K-State students.

An awards reception will take place at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Blumont Room in the K-State Student Union.

TO THE POINT Governor's budget plan to aid K-State

Money is coming, but where is it going?

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius recommended a 1/2-percent increase in funding for K-State for fiscal 2008 in her proposed budget Thursday.

An increase in state funding usually equals a smile on the face of any empty-pocketed student. But the questions stand — where is the money going, and who will it help?

Sebelius recommended a $4.9-million increase in salaries and a $2.2-million increase for university extension and agriculture programs. Also included was a $2.9-million decrease in funding for the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Part of this promised increase would include a boost in K-State's building and maintenance system budgets. Sebelius also is working to solve the "deferred maintenance" issue but is working on a multi-year plan.

The state is providing more cash, but students still are scratching their heads, wondering if they ever will see the effects of the proposed increase.

An increase in cash — however big or little — is always appreciated. But skepticism requires us to raise our proverbial eyebrow and keep an eye on the buck.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Comrade Nancy Pelosi and other Democrats of Congress have said they will increase the minimum wage by $2.10 to $7.25 per hour. This increase is part of their new, communistic five-year plan.

Like pulling a rabbit from a hat, Democrats believe the problems of poverty can be solved just by making money appear in the hands of the working poor.

"A Moral Minimum Wage," an article written by Peter Dreier and Kelly Candaele appearing in "The Nation," said if an increase in the minimum wage occurred, "... millions would be lifted out of poverty. The largest group of beneficiaries would be children, whose parents would have more money for rent, food, clothing, and other basic necessities."

Using U.S. Census data, Heritage Foundation scholars determined the average standard of living for the American poor includes having "a car, air conditioning, at least one color television with cable or satellite, a home in decent condition and enough food in the refrigerator."

Contrary to liberal belief, not everyone can have everything. Thomas Sowell, author of "Black Rednecks and White Liberals," said, "The first law of economics is scarcity, and the first law of politics is to ignore the first law of economics." Middle-class Americans will be hurt the most through an increase in the minimum wage. They will be forced to deal with an increase in the costs of goods and services without an increase in their own wages.

Increases to the minimum wage have been successful in many states without creating financial burdens; however, the success lies with tax cuts.

In states like Oregon, business owners are given large tax breaks to cover the increased cost of paying employees and buying materials.

Democrats voted against their own bill to increase the minimum wage earlier this summer after tax cuts were attached to the bill.

The call for an increase in the minimum wage has little to do with need but rather greed. Using the U.S.

Census data once again, only 15 percent of those who earn less than $6.65 live below the poverty line. Most minimum wage earners fall between the 16- to 24-year-old age bracket and are part of a middle-class family.

When people hear they are going to receive more money, saving usually is at the bottom of the priority list. Rather, people think about how much more they can spend. After the money is gone, people fall right back into the same financial situation they were previously in.

Currently, I make slightly above minimum wage as a houseboy at a sorority house. The thought of making more money sounded wonderful to me until I started to play the effects forward.

An increase in the minimum wage would end up costing the girls who live in the house an additional $4,284 dollars a year or $61.20 per person to keep all the houseboys employed. As other costs continue to go up, the houseboys start to look very expendable. This glorious plan to help me receive more money could end up costing me my job.

Magic is not the solution to the poverty problem. Poverty will not disappear with the waving of a hand. An increase in paper money creates an illusion of financial security, offering false hope to those who wish to better their situation.

Outing celebrities reminiscent of McCarthyism

Sometimes the best intentions are all wrong.

Such is the case of Perez Hilton, a gay blogger who has made it his mission to "out" celebrities he believes are gay.

Hilton says celebrities have no right to privacy, and as such are fair game.

Everyone has a right to privacy, and coming out as a homosexual, bisexual or transgender person is a personal decision.

For example, my friend's daughter, who is 11 years old, recently discovered boys but won't admit it. She says she likes pirates, and she has pictures of Johnny Depp all over her room.

Now I'm not about to call her on it, because, first, it would embarrass her, and second, I know how touchy that is for a young girl.

So imagine my horror when

I picture someone at her school suddenly deciding that she needs to have everyone in the world know she likes Johnny Depp.

She's 11 — just a kid. Teaching her to be ashamed of who she likes, and the fact that she is beginning to find boys attractive is hard on her little body.

But that is just what Hilton is doing to celebrities all over the world. Granted, these are adults, but the emotions are the same. Sex is a private matter and unless a person wants to talk about it, forcing someone to reveal who they are attracted to can be extremely traumatic.

Oddly enough, Hilton's motives aren't meant to be detrimental. He sincerely believes gay people shouldn't be ashamed of who they are and has said he is furthering the cause of equal rights by forcing them out of the closet.

The scary thing is a man named Joseph McCarthy decided to further the cause of anti-communism during the 1950s by using much the same tactics.

"I have ... a list of 205 that were known to the Secretary of State as members of the Communist Party ... (who still work) for the State Department," the former U.S. senator said.

Don't misunderstand me. I'm not comparing communists to homosexuals. What I am saying is the motives stem from the same misguided idealism.

When McCarthy went on his witch hunt, he believed he was doing it for the glory of the United States.

Hilton believes he is doing much the same thing to force equality and acceptance.

Communism is a belief system. A choice. McCarthy used people's beliefs to ruin their careers.

Being homosexual, bisexual or transgender isn't a choice. It's biological and a sexual matter at that.

Should people be ashamed of who they are or what sexual orientation they are? Of course not — that's who they are. Just as people, communists included, shouldn't be made to feel ashamed for what they believe.

What Perez is doing bothers me because it implies that he is trying to start a war, involving people in a way in which they are most vulnerable.

Sexuality is nothing to be ashamed of, and people — whether they are homosexual, heterosexual or whatever — are who they are.

But it is a private matter, and when you try to force someone into something they aren't ready for, you damage them irreparably.

The Hiltons of the world need to realize people aren't some sort of experimental path to righteousness. They aren't toys you can take out and put away when you are done with them.

The people he goes after have to live with what he does to them, or die in the process.

Diversity not about numbers of groups but interaction

LINCOLN, Neb. — I was once an international student. For the last seven-and-a-half years, no matter how "American" I felt, I could not escape my Chinese heritage.

Somehow, I frequently find myself talking about my ethnicity, a lot of whom are curious strangers. I enjoy sharing what I know and clearing up confusions, but sometimes people are just plain creepy.

I never thought I'd miss those uncomfortable encounters, but lately I feel my years at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln have been too peaceful. As much as I'd like to think it's because people are more enlightened here, I can't help but feel disappointed by the lack of attention.

The truth is, sometimes I secretly enjoy being singled out. I was the only Asian in my high school class based on his or her ethnicity. Even my parents' Asian friends tend to make assumptions. They asked, "Do you play the piano or violin?" I would proudly tell them I play the trumpet.

This kind of conversation used to be common for me, but not at UNL. Maybe it's that the college environment just encourages more political correctness. If anything, I expected more off-color remarks.

I attended middle school in Ames, Iowa, roaming the Iowa State campus like it was my backyard. Despite the occasional weirdo, most who tried to start a conversation based on questions about my ethnicity seemed normal, although sometimes disturbingly misinformed.

There are many educational events on campus that celebrate diversity, but attendance is voluntary.

When I go to a multicultural event, I see the same bunch. It seems those events tend to preach to the choir.

Only some colleges at UNL require courses concerning race, ethnicity and gender as a part of the Essential Studies program. Other colleges have only general social science and humanities requirements.

Perhaps everyone at UNL should be required to take a class to learn about other cultures.

Diversity isn't about how many people of each ethnicity, nationality, religion or sexual orientation are on campus. It's more about how people interact with each other.

I'm worried racism is not being eradicated as much as being pushed underground. As we debate how to measure diversity, maybe it's more urgent to try to promote understanding.

ATTORNEY GEN. SAYS U.S., MEXICO NEED TO BROADEN COOPERATION

MEXICO CITY — U.S. Attorney General Alberto Gonzales said Thursday the two nations must broaden their cooperation to curb the wave of drug violence rocking Mexico.

Gonzales, who met with Mexican Attorney General Eduardo Medina, applauded President Felipe Calderon's efforts to reduce drug violence, which killed more than 2,000 people in Mexico last year.

Since taking office in December, Calderon has sent 3,300 soldiers and federal agents to Tijuana and more than 7,000 troops to his native state of Michoacan.

More than 1,000 troops also have been sent to the Pacific resort of Acapulco and two other cities in the western state of Guerrero in a crackdown on drugs and crime there, state officials said.

In the past year, Mexican drug gangs have carried out a number of gruesome killings, including several beheadings, in their fight for lucrative drug routes.

Gonzales vowed to work closer with Mexico on gathering intelligence, exchanging information and experiences.

"Crime is not Mexico's problem alone or the United States' problem alone," Gonzales said in a statement. "It is our mutual challenge, and if we do not work together to meet that challenge, we will both fail."

POLICE ARREST PROTESTERS INSIDE FEDERAL COURTHOUSE

WASHINGTON — About 100 protesters were arrested at a federal courthouse Thursday after a brief demonstration calling for the shutdown of the U.S. military prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

The group — which had a permit for a demonstration outside the courthouse — began singing and chanting as they were led away in small groups, their hands in plastic cuffs.

Demonstrators made their way into the courthouse through a side entrance where they passed through metal detectors and were cleared by security screeners. The protesters gathered in an atrium where they began reading poetry and singing songs.

Chief U.S. District Judge Thomas Hogan ordered U.S. marshals to allow the group to gather peacefully. An aide said it was the first time such a demonstration had occurred inside the courthouse.

The arrests were triggered when the demonstrators violated rules laid down by U.S. Marshal George Walsh and continued wearing bright orange T-shirts and waving signs bearing slogans like "Stop Torture" and "Shut Down Guantanamo."

Walsh said the demonstrators would be cited, then released. Charges would be decided by federal prosecutors.

"They were going to be given a chance to be private citizens discussing something in the courthouse, but once you put the signs up it becomes something else," Walsh said.

Earlier, outside the Supreme Court building, several hundred demonstrators and dozens of rights activists wearing orange prison jump suits and black hoods called for the shutdown of Guantanamo.

PRESIDENT STEPS DOWN AFTER DECLARING A STATE OF EMERGENCY

DHAKA, Bangladesh — The president Thursday declared a state of emergency, stepped down as interim leader of Bangladesh's caretaker government and postponed this month's elections following violence by a key political alliance that said it would boycott the vote.

President Iajuddin Ahmed said that the balloting, which was scheduled for Jan. 22, would be delayed, and did not give a new date.

"It's not possible to hold the elections on schedule. We need a flawless voter list to ensure that the elections are free, fair and credible," Ahmed said.

A new voter list had been among the key demands of a major political alliance that has orchestrated paralyzing protests and strikes in recent months, alleging Ahmed's administration favored its rivals and saying it would boycott the vote.

Ahmed's removal as head of the caretaker government was the alliance's other main demand.

"I've decided to step down as the chief adviser of the caretaker government and I will, in a couple of days, appoint a new interim leader to hold an election in which all parties will be able to participate," Ahmed said in a televised speech.

In the meantime, one of his advisers, Fazlul Haque, would serve as the head of the caretaker government, he said.

Public official calls rocket shell blast at U.S. Embassy an 'act of terrorism'

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATHENS, Greece — An anti-tank shell was fired at the U.S. Embassy early Friday, striking the front of the building but causing no injuries. A senior police official said the blast was an act of terrorism, raising fears of a resurgence of far-left Greek militant groups.

Police closed off streets around the heavily guarded building after the explosion shortly before 6 a.m. The shell struck the third floor and smashed glass in nearby buildings.

Investigators were examining what they believed was the device used to fire the rocket shell from a construction site near the embassy.

"This is an act of terrorism. We don't know where from," Attica Police Chief Asimakis Golfis said. "There was a shell that exploded in the toilets of the building ... It was fired from street level."

Embassy officials confirmed that an explosion had taken place and said that no one had been injured. U.S. ambassador Charles Reis said the damage was "not extensive."

"There can be no justification for such a senseless act of violence ... The embassy was occupied at the time (but) nobody was hurt," he said.

Reis said there had been no warning of the attack.

"We're treating it as a very serious attack we will determine what it is when we know (more)," he said.

Authorities were searching apartment buildings near the U.S. Embassy and a nearby hospital for evidence.

"Such actions in the past have had a very heavy cost for the country — moral, financial and for the international standing of the country," said Greek Foreign Minister Dora Bakoyannis, who visited the embassy after the blast. "The Greek government is determined to undertake every effort to not allow such phenomena to be repeated in the future."

Kiosk owner Giorgos Yiannoulis described the explosion as strong.

"I heard a loud bang; I didn't realize what was going on," said Yiannoulis, who runs a kiosk near the embassy.

Traffic came to a standstill for more than three hours across parts of central Athens, as police and emergency services scrambled to the embassy building, which is a frequent destination for protest groups.

It was the first major attack against a U.S. target in more than a decade, following the arrest of members of Greece's far-left November 17 terrorist group. The group was blamed for killing 23 people — including U.S., British and Turkish officials — and dozens of bomb attacks.

In 2003, a special court gave multiple life sentences to November 17's leader, chief assassin and three other members. Lesser sentences were given to 10 others.

November 17 carried out a rocket attack against the U.S. embassy in 1996, causing minor damage and no injuries.

Several obscure militant groups have appeared since the November 17 members were arrested. Radical groups Revolutionary Struggle and Popular Revolutionary Action have been blamed for the bombings of three government ministries in 2005.

K-State women to face Missouri

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Riding the wave of its 48-45 victory against No. 17 Texas A&M, the K-State women's basketball team plays Missouri Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

The team, which held the Aggies to 45 points earlier this week, will look to defeat a Missouri team that stole two victories from the Wildcats last season.

Those two losses, which saw the Wildcats fall 68-42 in Columbia, Mo., and 66-65 in overtime in Manhattan, snapped a nine-game winning streak for the team and will provide the players with some added motivation this season.

"We were a young team last year and didn't know what it was like to compete for a whole 40 minutes," said senior guard Claire Coggins.

Both Coggins and coach Deb Patterson said they think this year's squad is better prepared to compete with Missouri than last year's team.

"Those losses to Missouri last year were big, but we're a different team now," Coggins said.

The Wildcats might be a different team, but Missouri is still as big an offensive threat as it ever was. The Tigers have scored less than 70 points only once this season. Conversely, K-State has scored fewer than 70 points in eight of its games.

"They're more advanced offensively than we are, so we're going to have to be very, very good at what it is we do well," Patterson said.

This means the Wildcats will need to eliminate costly turnovers on offense and work hard individually on the defensive end as they did in the A&M game.

"We knew they were ranked so we had the fire in us to win," sophomore forward Marlies Gipson said.

Gipson said she thinks that same fire will transfer to this Saturday's game.

"Our spirits are definitely high," Coggins said, "but you've got to get over it and focus on the next game."

Tickets to the game are available at the Bramlage ticket office.

Wildcats preparing for Anderson's 'Forty Minutes of Hell' philosophy

After three straight losses and a season-ending injury to star freshman Bill Walker, some might consider the K-State men's basketball team to be creeping toward basketball hell.

But hell - in the form of Missouri coach Mike Anderson's "40 Minutes of Hell" coaching strategy - doesn't arrive until Saturday. The Wildcats (10-6, 0-2 Big 12) will try for their first conference win of the season when they take on the Tigers on Saturday.

Anderson, a first-year coach at Missouri who had a previous stint at Alabama-Birmingham, has wasted little time in trying to establish his style of play.

He's converted the Tigers into a high-energy, tenacious bunch and has upgraded the talent level by signing highly regarded junior college players such as Stephon Hannah and Darryl Butterfield.

Full-court pressure, half-court traps and an up-tempo fastbreak game have become the norm in Columbia, Mo., since Anderson took over. It's a system that Anderson adopted from his mentor Nolan Richardson, who used the strategy in leading Arkansas to a national championship in 1994.

So far it seems to be paying off for Missouri.

The Tigers are off to an 11-4 start and have a pair of quality non-conference wins (Arkansas and Mississippi State) already on their résumé. For K-State, a team that has had problems with fatigue at times this season, Missouri's relentless pressure could create some problems.

"(The system) has been really good for Mike, and it's been really good for Nolan," coach Bob Huggins said. "I think when you have the personnel to play like that, it's a good way to play."

In its last game against Texas Tech on Jan. 8, K-State struggled against man-to-man defense in the half court. The Red Raiders pressured the Wildcats into turnovers, forced them into taking difficult shots and held them to just 52 points. This time, the Wildcats will

McGwire, legends should be picked for each era

This week the National Baseball Hall of Fame inductees were announced and, to no one's surprise, Cal Ripken Jr. and Tony Gwynn got in, and Mark McGwire did not.

McGwire did not receive the 75 percent of the votes necessary to be inducted. In fact, the Baseball Writers' Association of America gave him only 23.5 percent.

The reason for McGwire's denial into baseball's most elite club is simple: he has been accused of using performance-enhancing drugs.

Few people debate that McGwire did in fact take steroids, but there are individuals, including myself, who think McGwire belongs in the Hall of Fame regardless. Most people who believe McGwire is not deserving will say he cheated, and it isn't right to put a cheater in the Hall of Fame.

McGwire deserves to be in the Hall of Fame for three reasons.

First, I hate to break it to you, but baseball players have been cheating since the beginning of the sport. Throughout baseball's history, there have been fixed games, doctored balls, corked bats, stolen signs and steroid use.

Gaylord Perry is a Hall of Famer who admitted to doctoring balls. He used his infamous "spitball" pitch - which is illegal in Major League Baseball - to win 314 games.

Morals have no place in deciding whether or not someone should be inducted into the Hall of Fame. Ty Cobb was a cruel racist who was accused of fixing games and deliberately trying to injure other players.

If cheating and morals were not grounds to keep players out of the Hall 50 years ago, why should they be now? Voters for the Hall of Fame are supposed to judge a baseball player on what he did on the baseball field, not by his character.

A second reason McGwire deserves to be in the Hall is that every generation of baseball players has advantages and disadvantages.

When Babe Ruth played, he faced one pitcher for all nine innings, there were few left-handed pitchers, only white players were allowed to play, the mound was lower, ground-rule doubles counted as home runs, and the right-field fence at Yankee Stadium where Ruth hit most of his home runs was much shorter than any right field fence in the league now. All of these things favored Ruth, but no one dares say anything about him having an unfair advantage.

The 1990s became known as the steroid era and rightfully so. There is no question steroids were used by a lot of players.

A huge misconception is that steroids are used only by power hitters. Over the last few years, numerous pitchers have used steroids. Twenty-one of the first 47 players who were suspended for steroids in 2005 were pitchers. If pitchers were using steroids while McGwire was smashing home runs out of the park at record pace, doesn't that make his numbers even more impressive?

Steroids are just an advantage or disadvantage of this baseball generation.

A third reason McGwire deserves the Hall simply is his résumé. The guy broke a home-run record most thought was unapproachable. He hit 583 bombs in his career, belting 245 of those over a four-year span, finished seventh on the all-time home run list and made 12 all-star teams.

The Baseball Hall of Fame has tagged itself as being a place that "Preserves History, Honors Excellence and Connects Generations." McGwire is a huge part of baseball's history. No one can debate he was one of the all-time great power hitters in the history of baseball, and in order to connect generations you have to acknowledge the best players from each era.

Did bands like Pink Floyd and Peter, Paul and Mary dope up before writing every song? Probably. That does not make their music any less great.

Did guys like McGwire and Barry Bonds use steroids? Probably. That does not make them any less great either.

RUN | Wildcat track and field team travels to Arkansas

The K-State track and field team competes in the Arkansas Invitational today at Randal Tyson Track Center in Fayetteville, Ark., after capturing 10 events titles at the Wildcat Invitational last weekend in Manhattan.

Rovelto

Those titles included a win by senior Kaylene Wagner in the high jump with a mark of 5-10 3/4. Wagner qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championship with a jump of 6-1/2 in the first meet of the season.

"It's been good," Wagner said of the season so far. "This will be our first away meet."

The Arkansas Invitational is a good meet, she said, because it is the site of the NCAA Indoor Championship and will provide a good experience for the team.

"We should be really strong," Wagner said. "We have some really good individuals."

Coach Cliff Rovelto spoke highly of Wagner, saying she works hard and sets a tremendous example in all aspects, including her 4.0 grade point average.

Both Rovelto and Wagner said one of the individuals to watch for is Scott Sellers, a sophomore high jumper from Katy, Texas. Sellers qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championship with a jump of 7-4 1/4 on Dec. 9 at the K-State All-Comers meet.

The last time the Wildcats competed at the Randal Tyson Track Center, former K-State runner Christian Smith won the men's mile title at the 2006 NCAA Indoor Championship.

REC | Intramural officiating meetings begin next week

Meetings for students wanting to officiate intramural basketball will be held next week. The meetings will take place at 5 p.m. on Jan. 17, 18 and 22 at the Peters Recreation complex.

To participate, students must be enrolled in at least six hours this semester.

No officiating experience is necessary. Scheduling is flexible and students playing on an intramural basketball team are still eligible to officiate.

The meetings will provide training on rules and officiating mechanics, as well as an opportunity to officiate a scrimmage game before the intramural season begins.

SOC | Beckham looks to be a perfect fit for Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bend this, TomKat and Brangelina: Beds 'n' Posh are coming to Hollywood.

And David Beckham didn't even have to audition to become the next American Idol.

The most recognized soccer player on the planet, fashion icon, tabloid fixture and marketing giant announced a deal Thursday to play for the Los Angeles Galaxy.

"David Beckham is a global sports icon who will transcend the sport of soccer in America," said Major League Soccer commissioner Don Garber.

Bringing free kicks, glitz and his Spice Girl wife, Beckham is leading another British invasion, hoping to do for American soccer what the Beatles once did for pop music — make it rock.

"There are so many great sports in America," the 31-year-old former England captain said. "There are so many kids that play baseball, American football, basketball. But soccer is huge all around the world apart from America, so that's where I want to make a difference with the kids."

Beckham turned down a two-year contract extension from Spanish team Real Madrid, where his fading skills left him on the bench.

The Galaxy didn't say exactly what they'll pay him, but floated a figure of $250 million in salary and commercial endorsements over the five years of his contract. In other words, his move could be worth $1 million a week.

Los Angeles opens its season April 8 in Houston, but Beckham is not expected to join the team until August. His four-year contract with Madrid expires at the end of this season.

He'll start for the Galaxy and could enter a whole new universe: his deal was negotiated over 10 days by major entertainment industry players Simon Fuller, creator of "American Idol," and Creative Artists Agency, home to some of Hollywood's biggest actors.

Fuller manages both Beckham and his pop star wife, Victoria, whose pal Katie Holmes (and Tom Cruise) are represented by CAA.

"It's not lost on them that it's the entertainment capital of the world, and they know many people in the entertainment industry here," said Tim Leiweke, president and chief executive officer of Galaxy owner AEG.

Snowy conditions alter students' winter break plans

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Veronica Blair, senior in elementary education, started winter break with big plans to visit friends and family.

Those plans came to a halt, however, when drifts of snow closed highways and roads, leaving her car buried under a foot of snow.

"I got down there and all my plans were cancelled," she said, "so I sat at home and had quality family time."

Blair's hometown of Oakley, Kan., experienced the winter storm that affected western Kansas, eastern Colorado and central Nebraska throughout December, leaving some residents without electricity and covering the areas with snow, ice and sleet, according to the National Weather Service's Web site.

Blair said she planned to attend two weddings and meet with family to celebrate Christmas over the break, but with the weather conditions, she could not leave town.

"I couldn't go, so I sent cards to my friends that were getting married, and we told our family we'd see them at Easter," Blair said, laughing.

She said she tried to meet with friends and was able to drive around her town a little in a truck that belonged to her friend's father. However, since she was unable to go anywhere on most days, she said she ended up spending a lot of time on Facebook.com and watching movies with her brother.

"Nothing too exciting, really," Blair said.

When Blair was able to leave Oakley and drive back to Manhattan, she had to drive 35 miles per hour due to the ice.

In situations where students cannot make it back to school due to weather, they can call their college or the Office of Student Life, and their professors can be notified, said Carla Jones, assistant vice president of student life.

"A lot of students just e-mail their professor directly, and that tends to take care of the problem," Jones said.

Further west in Colorado Springs, Colo., Anika Bergh, sophomore in graphic design, found herself in the same snowy situation as several inches packed the ground each week.

"We got about five inches, and then the next week we got about four more inches, and it basically meant that we couldn't really go anywhere because the roads were terrible," she said.

Bergh said she had family parties that were cancelled due to the weather. However, she said she liked that her parents got to stay home because they couldn't make it to work.

Bergh said her troubles started when she was trying to leave Manhattan to drive home.

She said she stayed in Manhattan to work after her finals. Since she lives in the residence halls, she stayed at a friend's apartment but had to change the date she was leaving because of the weather.

"I had to stay here and just keep an eye out on the radar to see if anything was changing," she said.

The winter's snowstorm was unlike anything Blair and Bergh had seen in a long time, they both said.

"I remember when I was little, we had drifts that big," Blair said. "It's supposed to get snowy again, but I probably won't go back until it gets warm."

BY THE NUMBERS

Parts of Kansas, Colorado and Nebraska experienced piles of snow in the blizzards of December 2006.

Here are some of the numbers from the snowstorm in Denver.

■ 15 to 20 — percent of flights cancelled Dec. 29 at Denver International Airport

■ 2 — feet of snow that fell in Denver.

■ 4,700 — passengers stranded during the airport's two-day shutdown.

■ 200 — miles along Interstate 70 closed due to weather.

Suspect in custody, family plans memorial for missing student

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan. — Formal charges in the death of a 19-year-old Arkansas City woman might not be filed until next week because a suspect already is in custody, the Kansas attorney general's office said Thursday.

"Because we are holding a suspect on unrelated charges, it gives us the luxury of time to build a case," said Ashley Anstaett, spokeswoman for Attorney General Paul Morrison.

Jodi Sanderholm's car was found Tuesday at the bottom of the Cowley State Fishing Lake, and a woman's body was found about eight miles away. The 84-acre lake on U.S. 166 is about 15 miles east of downtown Arkansas City.

Morrison told KAKE-TV in Wichita he is encouraged by the case, noting that the body was in decent condition and authorities had a pretty good crime scene.

"These kinds of cases are every parent, every community's worst nightmare," Morrison said.

Although Sanderholm's identity has not been officially confirmed by autopsy results, her family already has made funeral arrangements. Her parents have been given no reason to believe the body found Tuesday is anyone other than their 19-year-old daughter, said the Rev. Charles Grant, pastor at First United Methodist Church.

"The only people who have seen the body are the police, and I guess now the coroner in Wichita," Grant said. "We're confident enough that we need to proceed. Otherwise, life is on hold and on standby until you get past that funeral time."

To accommodate the expected large crowds, the family has planned an 11 a.m. memorial service Tuesday at the W.S. Scott Auditorium at Cowley County Community College.

Arkansas City police said Wednesday the department was following up on information "that another individual and/or individuals may have also been involved in" Sanderholm's disappearance but would not elaborate.

Research sheds light on Huntington's treatment

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For years, scientists thought a clumping of proteins caused Huntington's disease, but upon discovery of a new compound, some say there might be a significant change to how they interpret the disease.

"Huntington's disease results from genetically programmed degeneration of brain cells, called neurons, in certain areas of the brain," according to the National Institute of Neurological Disorders and Stroke. "This degen-eration causes uncontrolled movements, loss of intellectual faculties, and emotional disturbance."

Scientists from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard Medical School worked together on a Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences study. Their recent find – a compound that obstructs the progress of Huntington's disease – could lead to a new treatment and eventually, a possible cure for the brain-deteriorating condition.

"We have, however, identified a compound that promotes inclusion formation in cellular models of both Huntington's disease and Parkinson's disease," the researchers state in a recent release through the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

The recently discovered B2 compound prevents huntingtin proteins – the proteins thought to cause the disease – from clumping together. The compound also reduces toxicity of other contributors to the disease.

"These results demonstrate that compounds that increase inclusion formation may actually lessen cellular pathology in both Huntington's and Parkinson's diseases, suggesting a therapeutic approach for neurodegenerative diseases caused by protein misfolding," the researchers state.

Both Huntington's and Parkinson's diseases have no official cure.

Scientists, however, have limited information about what causes Parkinson's disease, the researchers state.

Parkinson's disease, which also is benefited by the scientific research, has several setbacks similar to Huntington's disease. Often, sufferers first experience Parkinson's as a tremor of a limb. This eventually leads to slow movement or an inability to move, among other disabilities, the NIHDS states.

More than a quarter of a million Americans have Huntington's and half a million have Parkinson's disease; some of these people include those who potentially are at risk of inheriting the disease from an affected parent, according to the Huntington's Disease Society of America.

Huntington's disease is known to occur in men and women between the ages of 30 and 45, though onset can occur as early as the age of 2. The onset of Parkinson's disease, however, usually starts by age 60.

Huntington's disease is a known as a familial disease, passed from parent to child through a mutation in the normal gene. Every child of a Huntington's disease parent has a 50 percent chance of inheriting the disease's gene. If the child does not inherit the gene, researchers say, and that child will not develop the disease and cannot pass it to other generations.

Study finds women at higher risk to have, inherit chance of stroke

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A recent study involving 806 men and women who have suffered ischemic strokes in the past found that women are at a higher risk to inherit the possibility of having strokes than men.

The December 2006 study found that women who had strokes were 40 percent more likely to have at least one close relative who suffered a stroke than were men.

There also is an 80-percent chance for these women to have mothers with a history of stroke compared with men, according to the report release in the "Lancet Neurology," which is an international monthly journal that publishes original research articles and news about clinical neurology.

"The main implication for clinical practice is that when you consider who is at risk for stroke, it looks like family history in particular is more important in women than men, particularly if there is a family history of stroke in female relatives," said study author and director, Dr. Peter M. Rothwell, in the report.

Rothwell, the director of Stroke Prevention Research in Radcliffe Infirmary in Oxford, England, has been working with stroke survivors – more than a decade.

Among those who suffer from a stroke, the most significant type of stroke is the ischemic stroke, Rothwell said.

An ischemic stroke accounts for 83 percent of strokes, according to the American Stroke Association, a division of the American Heart Association.

"Ischemic strokes occur as a result of an obstruction within a blood vessel supplying blood to the brain," the association's Web site states.

"The underlying condition for this type of obstruction is the development of fatty deposits lining the vessel walls. This condition is called atherosclerosis."

More than 157,000 people died of stroke in 2003, according to the American Heart Association, making it the third largest cause of death in the United States. Stroke is the leading cause of long-term disability and serious illness, with more than 5 million stroke survivors today – 2.4 million males and 3 million females.

Royals honor O'Neil, give fans chance to sit in famous seat at home games

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – The Kansas City Royals are giving 81 people a chance to watch a game from Buck O'Neil's seat.

The club announced the "Buck O'Neil Legacy Seat Program" on Thursday. It will honor the Negro Leagues star who became a goodwill ambassador for the game and also honor others for their community service.

A different person will be selected to sit in O'Neil's seat at each home game during the upcoming season, team spokesman Toby Cook said. The selection process will be based on nominations from the public.

After O'Neil died Oct. 7 at age 94, team spokesman Toby Cook said, Royals officials were debating ways to honor him when club president Dan Glass suggested the legacy seat program.

"We were wondering, 'Should we retire the seat permanently? Should we retire it for a year?'" Cook said. "Dan said, 'I think Buck would get a kick out of somebody using his seat, even as we were honoring him.'"

Glass said he couldn't take full credit for the idea.

"We got in a room and started throwing around ideas, and it came out of my mouth first, I guess," he said.

O'Neil, the first black coach in major league baseball and a longtime scout in the big leagues, gained a new generation of fans after being featured in Ken Burns' "Baseball" documentary. He sat in the same seat – Row 101, Section C, Seat 1 – whenever he attended a Royals game at Kauffman Stadium.

His appearances were always marked by long lines of autograph seekers and well-wishers. O'Neil greeted them all with smiles, handshakes and hugs, often missing much of the game action because of the steady stream of visitors.

"He was always so cordial with everybody, especially children," Glass said.

The team has blocked off four seats for the program so those selected can bring along family and friends, Cook said.

O'Neil will be honored on the stadium's video board before each home game, Glass said, and those selected for the legacy seat program also will be featured in video presentations.

"These are people who probably don't want a lot of attention but really deserve it," Glass said.

Honoring O'Neil by honoring others for their service will make his absence a little easier to take, Glass said.

"He was just a fixture every day in that seat," he said. "It's going to be hard for us to watch games without him being in that seat, but I think he would appreciate this – particularly with what that seat will mean."

Denison construction to be completed 5 months early

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When work started on Denison Avenue in May 2006, it was expected to be finished in a year.

Now it appears to be wrapping up almost five months early, city engineer Robert Ott said.

"Basically, the contractor got the job done five months ahead of schedule," Ott said in an e-mail.

He said when the bid was put out to construction companies for the work, a bonus was included if the road would be done by the end of 2006.

The project is mostly complete, lacking some details yet to be completed, including painting the street markings.

In all, the project will cost $3.5 million, Ott said. That includes all engineering, construction, new streetlights, new traffic signals, new sidewalks, new sewer and several other improvements.

The completion of this project does little to lighten the Ott's workload, who has 121 other projects. He said these include traffic studies, in-house storm sewer design and water line projects.

"All of those projects are in different states as well," Ott said. "Some are pending, under design, under construction and punch-list/close-out phases."

There was some inconvenience during the construction, as those who regularly used Denison Avenue were forced to find different routes through Manhattan.

It was feared that business would be affected for the various stores in that area. Phil Hebrank, manager of Pizza Shuttle, 1800 Claflin Road, said while the volume of business was not affected, the delivery drivers had some difficulty getting around.

Subs-N-Such, 1800 Claflin

Road, didn't have trouble with business, said co-owner Paula Kelly-Frey.

"We have a lot of walk-in business, so we were not really affected negatively," Kelly-Frey said. "Also, the construction guys gave us business, and the contractors were very good about letting us know when the road was going to be closed so we could adjust."

House support for stem-cell research grows, president's veto stands

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON - The House voted to expand government-financed embryonic stem-cell research Thursday, but for the second time in two years lawmakers were unable to muster enough votes to overcome a promised presidential veto.

Still, the 253-174 vote was a high watermark in the stem cell debate, drawing advocates closer to the two-thirds vote threshold needed to override President Bush's objections.

With stem cells offering hope for healthcare cures, lawmakers on both sides of the issue punctuated the debate with poignant personal stories and clashed over the ethics of the science.

Addressing "those who do not have the will to stand up against a presidential veto," freshman Rep. Zach Space, D-Ohio, described his 16-year-old son's battle against juvenile diabetes and wondered aloud what awaited him as an adult.

"This research represents the only meaningful hope for a cure in my son's lifetime," Space said.

Embryonic stem cells hold the promise of medical breakthroughs because they have the ability to become any tissue in the body.

However, the research typically involves the destruction of frozen embryos created for in vitro fertilization, a step that stirs passions over the beginning of life.

Rep. Virginia Foxx, R-N.C., blind in one eye, said she could benefit from stem-cell science to replace a detached retina. But she said the federal government should emphasize research into adult stem cells, not those derived from embryos.

"Killing human life does not have to be accomplished to create efficacious treatment for people and diseases," she said.

The legislation would lift Bush's 2001 ban on the use of federal dollars spent on deriving new stem cells from fertilized embryos.

Bush vetoed similar legislation last year and actor Michael J. Fox elevated the issue into prominence with political ads during last fall's congressional elections. Democrats credit that issue, among others, for helping them drive Republicans from power in Congress.

Thursday's vote set another milestone in the new Democratic leadership's march toward passing a string of campaign promises in the early days of the new congressional session.

In the Senate, however, Democratic efforts to pass a wide-ranging ethics rule ran aground when Republicans, aided by nine Democrats, supported a more restrictive rule governing pet projects that lawmakers tuck into major legislation.

The setback slowed down the Senate's legislative pace and illustrated the brittleness of the Democratic majority. Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid of Nevada planned to work through amendments to the ethics rules through next week.

The floor debates in both houses occurred against the overwhelming presence of the Iraq war, coming a day after Bush told the nation he would send 21,500 more troops to Iraq. On and off the floor, lawmakers debated Bush's plan, clearly the top issue of the day.

More and more rank-and-file Republicans voiced skepticism about Bush's plan, but GOP leaders prepared to put up obstacles to Democratic efforts to express their opposition with a recorded vote.

Rep. Ric Keller, R-Fla., one of Bush's most ardent supporters, said Thursday he would have agreed three years ago with the president's call for more troops, but not now.

"At this late stage, interjecting more young American troops into the crossfire of an Iraqi civil war is simply not the right approach," Keller told the House. "We are not going to solve an Iraqi political problem with an American military solution."

The House on Friday turns to yet another item on its list of legislative priorities - requiring the administration to negotiate with drug companies for lower prices for Medicare. But that legislation, like the embryonic stem cell bill, also faces a presidential veto.

In a statement Thursday, the administration said, "Government interference impedes competition, limits access to lifesaving drugs, reduces convenience for beneficiaries and ultimately increases costs to taxpayers, beneficiaries and all American citizens alike."

Bush has only exercised his veto power once, when he rejected the last embryonic stem cell bill.

The new Democratic majority is likely to elicit more threats in the next two years than in the first six years of Bush's administration.

The embryonic stem cell bill has bipartisan support in the Senate. But the Senate bill, which is not likely to come up for some time, could undergo amendments during floor debate that would require it to be reconciled with the House version.

"You take it one step at a time," said Lawrence Soler, vice president of government relations for the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation, which supports expanded federally funded research.

"The bipartisan support for the overall issue is going to stand firm. That process will open up opportunities to have discussions with the administration."

Douglas Johnson, the legislative director of the National Right to Life Committee, an anti-abortion group, predicted the congressional debate would be overrun by advances in adult stem cell research, including new reported research that stem cells extracted harmlessly from amniotic fluid have properties similar to embryonic stem cells.

"We expect when the dust settles, the president's policy will be preserved and the science will continue to demonstrate that the stem cells obtained from other sources have far more potential and are far more easy to control," he said.

A month of movies

With a long weekend approaching, here's the rundown on the movies you might have missed over winter break

"We Are Marshall"

Movie review by Eileen Laux

On Nov. 14, 1970, a plane crashed, killing 75 people, including players and coaches on the Marshall University football team, as well as crew members and fans of the team.

"We Are Marshall" depicts what happened after the media frenzy died and how the town struggled to move on.

The university needed coach Jack Lengyel (Matthew McConaughey) to bring life back to the team, which was left with only a few returning team members, because in those days, freshmen were not allowed to play. Assisted by Red Dawson (Matthew Fox) – who was supposed to be on the plane but instead switched with someone and went on a recruiting trip – the team begins practice.

With the help of university president Donald Dedmon (David Strathairn), the team is able to play with its freshmen, and the games begin. The team meets with resistance from community members who believe it isn't yet time to start playing again.

McConaughey gives a good performance, portraying Lengyel as a zany, eccentric coach who is not there to be a savior but simply a football coach. Fox gives a great performance and communicates the pain of losing friends and co-workers to the audience.

David Strathairn makes the president out to be a guy who doesn't know much about football and doesn't quite know what to do with Lengyel.

The scene with the students screaming "We Are Marshall" brought goosebumps, as it makes a point that the students had a say in what was going on and banded together for their university. Many scenes in the film were emotional because they showed the pain a situation like that would bring and how hard it would be to come back from it.

"We Are Marshall" is a great sports movie and shows the effect one coach had on a tragedy that silenced a town.

"Children of Men"

Movie review by Greg Brown

Set in the bleak world of 2027, "Children of Men" delivers the most frightening, exciting, saddening and relevant vision of the future yet.

Humanity has lost its fertility and hope, and the film centers around Theodore Faron's (Clive Owen's) journey through the world. Tasked with escorting the first pregnant woman in more than 18 years, he carries the film on his weary shoulders. The directing is top-notch, with Alfonso Cuarón crafting long shots throughout the film, including an epic battle scene more harrowing than the opening of "Saving Private Ryan."

The production design is excellent, too, creating a gritty world papered with details that mirror several contemporary scenes of strife. Propelled by the immersive long takes, the film delivers shock after shock to the viewer; violence is over before the viewer has fully grappled with it, and plot twists plow through cliché after cliché.

By the time "Children of Men" reaches its end credits, there have been memorable moments on a level far above any previous efforts in this field, all working toward a film that will stick with viewers for a long time.

"The Pursuit of Happyness"

Movie review by Brendan Praeger

Dozens of underdog stories hit theaters each year in an attempt to cash in on the Oprah crowd by telling a semi-inspiring story about someone overcoming unlikely odds to live happily ever after.

"The Pursuit of Happyness" is one of them.

There are plenty of reasons why it would be easy to pick on this movie: it's too predictable, sentimental and unoriginal to be perfect, but somehow, despite all odds, it works.

Will Smith takes a film that easily could have run the race for Hallmark Channel syndication and carries it far beyond the level of inspiration usually present in this type of film.

Smith's performance as Chris Gardner – a salesperson who overcomes poverty and homelessness to become a successful stockbroker – is not only the best of his career, but it might be the best performance of any actor this year.

Smith's real-life son Jaden also shines in the movie. The combination of their shared talent, as well as the genuine father-son chemistry, make their characters believable and lovable enough to turn a forgettable storyline into a winner.

Not bad for the Fresh Prince. I just hope his success doesn't keep him from doing "Bad Boys 3."

"Rocky Balboa"

★★★★☆

Movie review by Brendan Praeger

When I first heard Sylvester Stallone was going to return to write, direct and star in a sixth

"Rocky" film, I nearly choked from laughter.

Why would the 60-year-old actor do this to a once-great franchise that already has endured more than its share of roundhouses and uppercuts?

Because he knew it would work.

I won't pretend "Rocky Balboa" isn't a flawed film. It's too slow at the beginning and too cheesy throughout. The idea that a video game simulation could spawn an exhibition match between the undefeated champion of the world and a restaurant owner well beyond the requirement of an AARP membership was almost too ridiculous to reel me in.

I kept waiting for Stallone's film to fall flat on its face. One wrong move could have pushed the whole thing into absurdity.

But, surprisingly, that moment never came. In fact, when the "Rocky" music started playing during the obligatory training montage, I couldn't have been more excited to see the Italian stallion step into the ring one last time.

It's not a masterpiece, but it never was intended to be. This is a fitting sendoff for one of America's most beloved movie characters.

Much like Rocky himself, "Rocky Balboa" doesn't score a knockout, but at least it goes the distance.

"Dreamgirls"

Movie review by Sheila Ellis

"Dreamgirls" is worth giving Carmike Theatres seven bucks. With all of the larger-than-life reviews it has received, I went to the theater with high expectations, and they definitely were met.

Stars Beyoncé Knowles and Jennifer Hudson are real-life dream girls. From Destiny's Child controversy to American Idol vote-offs, these two women truly had what it took to bring these characters to life.

Coming from the ghettos of Detroit with looks, talent, and determination, the fictional group, The Dreamettes, would stop at nothing to make it big. Deena Jones (Knowles), Effie White (Hudson) and Lorrell Robinson (Anika Noni Rose) star as the ambitious group who meet Curtis Taylor Jr. (Jamie Foxx), who is searching for the next big group to put his label on the map. Taylor is a hard-nosed agent who will sacrifice anyone, including Effie White, for success.

Overall, Knowles had the best acting performance. Eddie Murphy stole the spotlight from Foxx with his performance as Jimmy "Thunder" Early, and – sorry, Foxx fans – but his performance was not Academy Award-worthy.

Hudson gave life to "Dreamgirls" by adding soulful and emotional vocal performances.

"Dreamgirls" is nominated for five Golden Globe Awards, and the film definitely deserves them. Hopefully it will be so lucky this March and pick up some Oscars, because this film is a classic and will live on for years to come.

Bush's troop plan provokes bipartisan criticism

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Bush's plan to send more troops to Iraq ran into a wall of criticism Thursday on Capitol Hill as administration officials drew confrontational challenges from both Democrats and Republicans.

Defense Secretary Robert Gates said the administration might abandon the increase if the Iraqi government doesn't do its part, but he provided no timetable.

"I think most of us, in our minds, are thinking of it as a matter of months, not 18 months or two years," he told the House Armed Services Committee.

Bush and top members of his national security team sought to rally support for the troop buildup a day after he unveiled his plan for turning around a conflict that has lasted nearly four years and cost more than 3,000 American military lives.

Instead, Gates and Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice found themselves in a battle that is likely to dominate Congress for months or longer and already is shaping the 2008 presidential election.

"I think this speech given last night by this president represents the most dangerous foreign policy blunder in this country since Vietnam, if it's carried out," Sen. Chuck Hagel, R-Neb., a potential 2008 presidential contender, told Rice.

Sen. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., noted his own past support for the administration on the war but said he could not continue.

"I have not been told the truth over and over again by administration witnesses, and the American people have not been told the truth," he said.

A new AP-Ipsos poll found approval for Bush's handling of Iraq hovering near a record-low 29 percent of Americans approve and 68 percent disapprove.

Bush cautioned that the troop increase "is not going to yield immediate results. It's going to take awhile."

His plan, outlined in a prime-time address to the nation on Wednesday, would raise troop levels in Iraq by 21,500 to 153,500 and call for the Iraqi government to increase its own forces.

"American patience is limited, and obviously if the Iraqis fail to maintain their commitments we'll have to revisit our strategy," said Gates.

Committee members pressed Gates, who replaced Donald H. Rumsfeld at the Pentagon, on an exit strategy for the U.S.

"At the outset of the strategy, it's a mistake to talk about an exit strategy," he said.

Gates, in testimony to the committee and earlier at a news conference, said he was requesting increasing the size of the Army and Marine Corps by 92,000 troops over the next five years.

He also said the Pentagon would recall to duty sooner than planned some National Guard and Reserve troops who have served yearlong tours in Iraq or Afghanistan.

The U.S. led a coalition that invaded Iraq in March 2003, despite failing to win U.N. Security Council support. The government of Saddam Hussein quickly crumbled, and Bush declared major combat operations more than two months later.

Bush's war effort initially had strong support, both in Congress and among other Americans. Yet that support has eroded as violence has continued.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said he hoped to bring up a nonbinding resolution next week expressing opposition to any troop buildup. A similar move is expected in the House.

Reid said Bush ignored the results of November's midterm elections, the advice of the bipartisan Iraq Study Group and that of his own top generals.

"In choosing to escalate the war, the president virtually stands alone," Reid said.

The Senate's top Republican, Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, threatened a filibuster — a delaying tactic — to block any legislation expressing disapproval of the buildup plan.

McConnell conceded that GOP lawmakers as well as Democrats are troubled by Bush's new policy, but he said, "Congress is completely incapable of dictating the tactics of the war."

Options for critics of the war to try forcing its end are limited, given the slim margin of Democratic control, especially in the Senate. But votes stating symbolic opposition to the troop buildup could embarrass many Republicans leery of supporting Bush's plan.

Rice appeared in the morning before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and in the afternoon before the House counterpart. She was grilled sharply by members of both parties.

Not a single member of the Senate panel expressed outright support for the president's plan. One after another offered skepticism on various points — from the rationale for the war to Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki's sincerity and resolve, from the need for additional troops to the administration's ruling out talking to Iran and Syria.

"You're going to have to do a much better job" explaining the rationale for the war, "and so is the president," said Sen. George Voinovich, R-Ohio.

Rice acknowledged widespread skepticism among Americans. "I want you to know that I understand and indeed feel the heartbreak that Americans feel at the continued sacrifice of American lives," she said.

"I believe the president's strategy is not a solution, Secretary Rice. I believe it's a tragic mistake," said Joe Biden, D-Del.

Rice told senators there was a "national imperative not to fail."

The Senate panel was flush with 2008 presidential hopefuls and possible contenders, including Hagel, Biden and Democrats John Kerry of Massachusetts, Christopher Dodd of Connecticut and Barack Obama of Illinois.

Meanwhile, Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., another presidential hopeful, said after a meeting at the White House that he was concerned about al-Maliki's capabilities as well as "whether these are sufficient number of troops."

"I do think we can succeed," McCain said.

McCain is among a handful of lawmakers who have called for more — not fewer — U.S. troops in Iraq.

Ft. Riley's Big Red One to deploy to Iraq 3 days ahead of schedule

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. — Before going on three weeks' leave, a brigade of soldiers packed their gear and sent it on its way to Iraq, expecting to catch up to it sometime in February.

Now, it appears the 4th Brigade of the 1st Infantry Division will be meeting up with containers of equipment and supplies sooner than expected. President Bush's decision to increase the number of ground forces in Iraq means the 3,400 soldiers of the "Dagger Brigade" of the Big Red One will leave Fort Riley three days ahead of schedule.

Lt. Col. Jay Pitz, brigade executive officer, said the change in plans had a minimal effect on the soldiers.

"Everything was in place. Our soldiers have already completed their training and are ready to deploy," said Pitz, 39, a veteran of the first Gulf War in 1991.

The 3,400 soldiers heading to Iraq are part of the new strategy outlined Wednesday by Bush. His plan is to raise troop levels in Iraq by 21,500 — from 132,000 to 153,500 — at a cost of $5.6 billion. It also calls for the Iraqi government to increase its own forces and to do more to quell sectarian violence.

"We're going over prepared to conduct the full spectrum of combat operations," Pitz said.

An exact deployment date is not released by the Army, citing security concerns, but a ceremony is scheduled for Jan. 25 on the Cavalry Parade Field to give the troops a formal send-off.

Pitz said the soldiers took long vacations from training during the Christmas holiday after spending a month training at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. The training is traditionally a final rehearsal for soldiers before they are deployed.

"The families have handled it well. They just came off three weeks of block leave, and they knew that was the last time they would spend a great deal of time," Pitz said. "I can't say if they were surprised, but they were prepared."

The brigade is one of the newest in the Army, having been formed at Fort Riley little more than a year ago as part of the 1st Infantry Division's return to Kansas after 10 years in Germany. Pitz said there were a number of new soldiers, though all of the company, battalion and brigade commanders have been deployed at least once to combat.

Another brigade has been downsized and is now leading the Army's mission to train teams of advisers that will spend a year in Iraq or Afghanistan to train those nations' security forces.

That mission is viewed as a key part of the new Bush strategy to make the Iraqi and Afghan security forces capable of defending their nations and ending the U.S. presence. A group of 70 Afghans is at Fort Riley through early next week to train with U.S. soldiers preparing to go to Afghanistan in the spring.

K-State Student Union begins charging rent for conferences

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

People who use the K-State Student Union for conferences now officially are required to pay for the use of rooms.

Effective Jan. 1, conference rates are charged to rooms when two or more of the following apply: a group of people is using two or more rooms in one day, people are meeting in rooms for two consecutive days, there is a charge or admission fee for the conference or the conference involves mostly off-campus attendees, according to the Appendix B of the Union Constitution.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said the criteria for payment were implied in the past but were not in writing.

"All we did was revise what constitutes a conference," he said. "The same criteria is still there."

The Union Governing Board set the guidelines for what qualifies as a conference in the middle of last semester, said Mary Fox, president of the Union Governing Board.

"The reason it came up was because we had fuzzy lines between who was a conference and who was exempt from it," said Fox, junior in political science.

"Being that we are a non-profit organization, we were losing money."

Fox said some groups were using their organizations to get free rooms for companies.

"Any student organization gets to book rooms for free," Fox said. "Sometimes people used the rooms to recruit for jobs. We wanted to eliminate that."

When organizations charge a fee for the conferences, Connaughton said there should be a fee for the room in which they have their conference.

"If you're having a conference, more than likely you're charging a delegate fee," he said. "Over the years there have been some situations that we wanted to take a look and get everyone on the same fee. That was the reason for trying to look at it. We were inconsistent. We thought, if your organization's going to get charged, it should be the same rate and situation."

Fox said the set guidelines have led to a few complaints.

"The biggest complaint was that an organization has used it every year and they have been exempt," she said. "They haven't paid in the past."

However, Fox said most students and organizations understand.

The exceptions to the charged rates occur when the event includes mostly college or high school students and the sponsoring K-State organization is not charging a fee, according to Appendix B.

For more information about Appendix B, contact the Union Director's office at (785) 532-6591.

MEN'S BB | Huggins confident about conference games

likely face tough defense again.

"If you're going to play Missouri, you've got to get ready for their pressure," Huggins said.

Though the Wildcats lost their first two games in conference play, Huggins balked when asked if his team is feeling a sense of urgency.

"I'm not sure what urgency means," Huggins said. "It's a marathon. It's not a sprint. We've got 15 games to go."

Sophomore guard Cartier Martin said the team plans on trying to control the pace of the game and will look to get good shots, something the Wildcats have failed to do consistently this season. He also said playing a transition type of game might help them get out of their recent shooting funk.

"I think it'll definitely help our field goal percentage if we can get some points around the basket and not have to rely on so many jump shots," Martin said. "It might trigger our ability to shoot the ball a little bit better."

And if things don't go right, are the Wildcats afraid of "40 Minutes of Hell"?

"For the last three days it's been pretty rough. We've already been through hell," Martin said. "So I'm sure coach Anderson is not going to put us through as much hell as coach Huggins has."

K-State basketball coach Bob Huggins argues with a referee about a call made during the Wildcats' 62-52 loss to Texas Tech.

K-State professor one step closer to trial in stalking case

Psychology professor John Uhlarik listens to motions during a hearing Friday morning at the Riley County Courthouse. Uhlarik is charged with stalking former K-State track athlete Gwen Wentland.

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Psychology professor John Uhlarik is one step closer to his trial after Friday's motions hearing.

Uhlarik is charged with stalking former K-State track athlete Gwen Wentland, with whom he had a five-year relationship.

Judge Meryl D. Wilson presided during the District Court Division II hearing at the Riley County Courthouse.

Uhlarik's attorney, Keen Umbehr, began the hearing by requesting that copies of evidence be returned to his client.

The Riley County Police Department seized numerous items from Uhlarik's home during a search which led to Uhlarik's arrest in March 2006.

The copies of evidence Umbehr was asking to be returned were nude photos of Wentland. Umbehr said the photos were not obscene and did not depict a sexual act.

Wilson ruled the defense would be allowed to make copies of the originals and then return the originals to the state.

Umbehr also motioned for a list of specific instances the state attorney would use during the trial, saying the list of about 50 reported incidences he had was too vague. He said his basis was to not be surprised by what incidences the state would focus on.

"That is trial by ambush," Umbehr said. "I don't think the state is going to go down that list and check off each and every one."

However, state attorney Bethany Fields said the state intends to use all of the incidences listed.

Wilson denied the motion, saying the list given was clear enough.

"Generally speaking, the law doesn't require a criminal act be proven to be committed on a specific date," he said. "I don't see how there

Manhattan community gathers to honor Martin Luther King

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Community leaders, award winners and performers gathered in the Manhattan Town Center Monday to celebrate and honor Martin Luther King. The day-long celebration drew crowds that listened and watched members of the community celebrate King's legacy.

Information booths were scattered throughout the mall's courtyard while different presenters spoke, read poems, sang and danced as part of the festivities.

K-State Provost M. Duane Nellis read sections of the speech King delivered when he spoke at Ahearn Field House on Jan. 19, 1968.

The recipients of the Spirit of Martin Luther King Jr. Community Service Award were recognized during the ceremony.

James Boyer, a retired K-State professor in the College of Education, and William Greene, a long-time educator in the community, received the award.

Greene's family accepted his award on his behalf because he died last fall.

Jim Hardy, chair of the committee, said the committee selected members of the community for the award based on two criteria.

"It's like somebody who has had long-term service in the community and involved in diversity," he said. "It has to be someone that is skilled at not being polarized."

Linda Morse, member of one of the planning committees, said there are two planning groups in Manhattan: one on campus and one in the community.

"We plan a bunch of these things in the community, and then other events are planned for the campus," she said. "So we each only have four or five events, but we have one big list."

Winning entries were on display from an art and writing contest that was part of the Manhattan Public Library's Martin Luther King day of celebration.

The 333 entries included people ages 5 to 84 years old from the Manhattan area, and the winners of each category were recognized and given prizes during the ceremony, said Jennifer Adams, children's service manager for the library.

K-State students had a booth where they recruited volunteers for the "Make It A Day On, Not A Day Off" service campaign.

Patrick Simpson, May 2006 graduate in biology, said the K-State Community Service Program was conducting different community service projects throughout the day for the celebration.

"Our service sites are very diverse," he said.

Simpson said volunteers registered in the morning for the different events, including helping in the retirement communities and taking down the decorations in downtown Manhattan.

Early-morning fire causes light damage to Pi Kappa Phi sorority house

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A fire caught members of the Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity by surprise Friday morning.

The Manhattan Fire Department responded to a fire at the Pi Kaps' house, 1614 Fairchild Ave., just before 10 a.m. Assistant Fire Chief Rick Berry said the fire was found inside a wall in the sleeping dorm on the house's third floor.

Firefighters found the source of the flames and put it out quickly, Berry said at the scene. He later said an investigation found $5,000 in structural damage and $1,000 in losses to the contents of the house.

An electrical problem is likely to have started the fire, Battalion Chief Mike Heptig said.

No injuries were reported to have been caused by the fire.

K-State's Pi Kaps had been host to 14 members of their fraternity from Colorado State University that night. They were stopping for the night on a trip to a Pi Kappa Phi conference in St. Louis. Half of them slept in the sleeping dorm that night.

Adam Robertson, junior in marketing, said the Colorado State students were the first to notice when the fire appeared to start under his bed.

"I would have been up there by myself if it weren't for the Colorado State University guys," Robertson said. He said he later learned he lost some clothes and his K-State men's basketball tickets to the fire.

Bobby Barczyk, Colorado State junior in marketing, said he originally thought the smoke was from the furnace but when it grew thicker he realized something was wrong and began waking people up. He said it got to the point where he couldn't see 10 feet in front of him.

Tyler Price, senior in broadcast journalism and chapter president, said he called 911 while fraternity members used fire extinguishers. He said they did little good because the fire was inside the wall, so they evacuated.

"A lot of people grabbed whatever they could, but then we realized it wasn't so bad," Price said.

He said the damage will be covered by the fraternity's insurance, and the Pi Kaps have been advised to stay off the third floor until repairs are completed.

Price said the chapter moved into the house after another fire destroyed the fraternity's house at 1716 Fairchild Ave. in summer 1991.

He said members of the K-State chapter had planned on going to the conference with the Colorado State Pi Kaps but changed their minds after the fire.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION POLICIES UNDER FIRE

EVANSTON, Ill. — Despite recent efforts in three states, including Michigan, to end affirmative action policies, civil rights activists in Illinois say similar changes are not on the horizon.

Black California businessman Ward Connerly is funding initiatives across the country to stop affirmative action, an effort that has worked in California, Washington and, since November, Michigan.

The new legislation bans any programs "that give preferential treatment to groups or individuals based on their race, gender, color, ethnicity or national origin for public employment, education or contracting purposes."

The University of Michigan delayed its admissions process because of the proposal and issued a press release saying it would work to continue pursuing diversity within these new constraints.

Connerly's organization, the American Civil Rights Institute, plans to target as many as two dozen more states in the future. One could be Illinois, according to an article in the Washington Times.

STUDY SHOWS PROGRESS OF HISPANIC STUDENTS

LINCOLN, Neb. — Don't believe the myth immigrant Latino families don't value higher education.

That's one conclusion drawn from a study released earlier this month by two professors at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. The study focused on the assimilation of second-generation Latino students in Nebraska.

Results from the study showed that second- and third-generation Hispanics ages 25 to 65 were more likely to pursue a college degree and hold a bachelor's degree than first-generation Hispanic immigrants.

But the survey also showed that third-generation Hispanics are not making the same collegiate progress as the previous generation.

Nearly 74 percent of first-generation Mexican Americans earned less than a high school diploma compared with 25.6 percent of second-generation and 18.6 percent of third-generation Hispanics.

Nearly 23 percent of second-generation Mexican Americans hold a bachelor's degree or higher compared with only 2.6 percent of first-generation Mexican students.

More than 85 percent of Latino students in all three generations hoped to earn at least a bachelor's degree.

The study was based on the results of the Current Population Survey for March 1997, 1999, 2001 and 2003 and from the Educational Attainment in Nebraska survey, conducted in four urban high schools during 2004 and 2005.

King discusses civil rights in final public collegiate speech

By Sandy Dalrymple and Tom Palmer
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Editor's note: The K-State Collegian published the following story when Martin Luther King came to speak at the university on Jan. 19, 1968, just a few months before he was shot in April 1968. This piece is the first in a weekly series of archival stories published in previous Collegians. We ask readers to enjoy this taste of history.

Martin Luther King Jr. today stressed the "long, long way to go" in the struggle for civil rights in a speech today at Ahearn Field house.

King attempted to answer the "desperate question, whether there has been any real progress in the Negro revolution." He spoke about the history of the struggle and the future solutions to the more than 7,200 persons in attendance at Ahearn.

"I try to present a realistic position," King said. "There have been significant strides for racial justice - but we have a long, long way to go."

He mentioned the "new Negro - ready to sacrifice to be free." There were two turning points in the revolution - legal and psychological. But even with all the progress, he said, "we can't end here."

"No area of our country can boast a clean hand in the realm of brotherhood," King said. He spoke of racial prejudice in the legal system in Mississippi, of the "burn the church of your choice" attitudes of some in the South and the underemployment of Negroes everywhere.

King also explained the psychological sense of murder - how blacks work every day long and hard, but they make so little they can't function in mainstream economic life.

"The Negro often sees life as a corridor without exits," he said. He presented the "facts of Negro history - but to stop here with these developments is to wrap our progress in a package of superficiality."

King mentioned the civil rights bill of 1964, voting rights of 1965 and various student movements across the country - all part of the civil rights process.

"When the students sit down, they are standing up, for the best American dream," he said.

The intrinsic worth of the Negro is something even the Negro did not realize for many years, King said.

"When Negroes first appeared in the United States in 1619, they were a thing to be used - not persons to be respected," he said.

The legal turning point came in 1954, when the Supreme Court pronounced the segregation laws constitutionally dead.

King said though he believes nonviolent methods of exposing moral defenses are most effective in fighting segregation, he could not condemn violence without also recognizing the intolerable conditions that create it.

"America has failed to hear the plight of the Negro, and he is calling for attention," he said. "As long as justice is postponed, we will be on the verge of social disruption."

At first, King said, some supporters were doing the right thing for the wrong reason, or because of hate rather than equal rights.

The Johnson administration, he said, is concentrating on winning an unjust, ill-conceived war in Vietnam instead of one on poverty.

Having studied journalism in college, Reynolds spent time as a film reviewer for the Topeka Daily Capitol and, as part of his duties, interviewed a number of film's brightest talents. Reynolds' research has paid off as viewers who have seen him regularly on NBC-TV's "Days of Our Lives" and "Generations" will attest. Reynolds has subsequently established Abe Carver as the longest running African-American character in television history, and Reynolds, of course, the only African-American actor to portray a single character for so many years.

TO THE POINT City, university should work together better

We thoroughly enjoyed mocking December by ambling about in shorts and sandals. Over the past week though, December's colder sibling reminded us that we do, in fact, have a daddy, and his name is January.

It would have perhaps been more tolerable had we simply had one solid belting of snow and gotten over the whole affair. But the slow, steady jabs of a bit here, a bit there, now nothing make the affair tedious – especially for those of us forced to travel the slushy continuum of Manhattan's roads.

For some reason, known only to powerful people in hidden rooms, the roads of the University bordered on meticulous, while much of the rest of Manhattan merrily slid about.

These were not obscure roads in dingy corners of the city. When one cruises with ease down Lovers Lane only to find Manhattan Avenue looking like some lost path through the Himalayas, it seems the pistons of university and city cooperation are uncoiled, or as the situation may have it, frozen shut.

The city and university have joined forces in the past, combining might, money and effort to combat the forces of pothole, lighting and traffic congestion. We know there is a City/University Special Projects Fund Committee that exists for such purposes.

Preparing for bad weather, hardly a rarity in this particular part of the world, requires team effort with all heaving and hoing conducted in unison. If the university and city possess the same capabilities, why not find some way to combine them?

After all, a university with pristine streets is worth little if only accessible by dog sled.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Queen of hypocrisy

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi is a smooth talker, but reality falls short Sound the trumpets, wave the banners and give alms to the gods above; Nancy Pelosi is Speaker of the House.

We all should be thankful she was bestowed with this great honor, which places her only two heartbeats away from the presidency.

Listening to Pelosi talk about herself, it seems she believes she is qualified to hold the position only due to her lack of a Y chromosome.

Instead of referring to her leadership skills, intellect or ability to perform under pressure, Pelosi falls back on the age-old idea of women shattering the glass ceiling. Pelosi claims to be "the most powerful woman in America," without explaining how she earned the power she was given.

In an introductory speech during a Democratic Party fundraiser at the National Building Museum, Pelosi was referred to as the "most powerful Italian since Caesar." All I have to ask is, where's Brutus when you need him?

Surrounded by children, Pelosi brought the 110th Congress into session. These children were nothing more than a photo opportunity and the official resurgence of the liberal playbook. Nothing tugs at the heartstrings of Americans like the hope of helping children.

Pelosi is not afraid to be labeled a liberal. In an interview with The New Republic magazine in 2002, Pelosi proudly stated, "I pride myself in being called a liberal; I don't consider myself a moderate." It truly is a shame that Pelosi's personal life doesn't reflect her public image.

Like any good socialist, while in public Pelosi straightens her halo and appears as a savior for the working class. Since becoming a representative, her focus has been on workers' rights. She strongly stands against the outsourcing of American manufacturing jobs and sees unions as an important tool for workers in this country.

In 2003, our fine comrade Pelosi was given the Cesar Chavez Legacy Award for encouraging the unionization of Hispanic migrant workers.

But, according to the Personal Financial Disclosure Reports required by Congress, Pelosi is one of the wealthiest members of the House, with more than $50 million in such things as stocks, hotel resorts and her vineyard.

Her stock holdings include shares in companies like Cisco Systems, Inc. During the past few years Cisco has been outsourcing American jobs to Asia, and has done this so effectively it set up a division for the corporation to train other companies how to outsource easier.

Maybe liberals, like Pelosi, are right when they say only stockholders profit when jobs go overseas.

Pelosi has large financial holdings in the Auberge du Soleil in Napa, Calif., and the San Ysidro Ranch in Santa Barbara, Calif.

BRETT KING

Both of these resorts are very upscale, with rooms ranging from $525-$3,750 a night. They employ over 250 individuals, but neither allows employees to unionize.

Pelosi hires different firms to harvest the grapes from her vineyard each year. However, each firm neglected to be a part of the United Farm Workers.

The UFW is the very program Cesar Chavez formed to protect migrant workers from being exploited by vineyard owners, like Pelosi.

The grapes from Pelosi's vineyard have gone to many non-union wineries such as Liparia Cellars, Roche, Ravenswood Winery and the Charlore Wine Group.

Her actions outside of the Congress are disappointing. It seems "the most powerful woman in America" doesn't have enough integrity to practice what she preaches. Nancy Pelosi's actions are nothing more than a simple case of "do as I say, not as I do."

Brett King is a junior in political science. Please e-mail your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

Financial information should be accessible

The role of money in American political campaigns has been universally ballyhooed. Nobody really likes it, as the disproportionate influence of money seems to have a dissonance with the democratic ideal of "one person, one vote."

Opponents of reform say regardless of our immediate wishes, monetary contributions to political campaigns are a form of free speech under the First Amendment. Proponents of reform like Senators John McCain, R-Ariz., and Russ Feingold, D-Wis. disagree, arguing that money isn't free speech.

Resolving this basic disagreement seems difficult, as there isn't an accepted method of deciding whether money falls within the bounds of free speech. The Supreme Court was divided 5-4 in McCain v. FEC, which addressed whether the Campaign Reform Act violated the free speech provisions of the First Amendment. Far from clarifying the issue, the court issued a tangled mess of opinions, concurrences and dissents.

We should tackle it from a politically open position that examines the positive and negative effects money has on politics while sidestepping the arguments over conceptual jargon.

The issue is clarified by an examination of how power is transferred from one person to another in circumstances that are clearly free speech (like an endorsement), followed by a comparison to monetary contributions.

With an endorsement, it's a transfer of power from a citizen to a politician. An endorsement gains its power from how well it's known to the public figure's supporters, and that generally is a function of how widely it's known to the general populace.

Contributions of money to a political campaign also transfer some power. The power of money is irrespective of the contribution's fame, since the cash of the commoner and the celebrity spends the same and most contributors tend to lean towards privacy. This secretive tendency is what people fear about monetary contributions, and what distinguishes them from the wider realm of free speech.

To eliminate this distinction, we should bring monetary contributions to the level with other free speech or quash it completely. Looking at politics in America, I don't believe money ever will be relegated to a non-factor. Stifling regulations will drive the flow of money underground, increasing the problem. Instead, we should make the process of contributing money more transparent to outside scrutiny.

OpenSecrets.org is one non-governmental agency's effort to clarify who's giving donations and who's receiving them. The site tabulates all the information about various candidates' donors.

On the governmental side, we should shift our efforts from pushing money out of politics to making its effects as obvious as possible. This might involve adjusting the McCain-Feingold campaign finance laws, but I won't pretend to be an expert on what needs to be changed.

The democratic process would be improved if both sides abandoned their tug-of-war over semantics and instead fought over how to make the electoral system more open.

WRITER RECOUNTS AIRPORT SECURITY FLUB

THE NEW YORK TIMES

I stand at the closed metal door that separates Gate 85 from its jetway. Hello, I call, idiotically, and I knock, as loudly as possible, using the heel of my shoe. Surprisingly, when I turn the handle of the door to the jetway, I find it unlocked. Unsurprisingly, when I push it open, an alarm goes off. I stand there, holding the handle, waiting for someone official to come, expecting to be chastised and confident that, as I am holding a valid United States passport and making no attempt to flee, I can explain my predicament.

But no one answers the alarm, which is shatteringly loud and still ringing. The handful of travelers in the waiting area, crumpled middle-aged men, watch without expression as I prop the door open with my little black shoe – in case it's locked from the other side – and disappear down the jetway toward the plane. Am I a federal criminal now? Does anyone care?

CHINA MUST EXAMINE PAST FAILURES OF WORLD POWERS TO REMAIN STRONG

CHINA DAILY

It is always good for people to take the time to learn about others' experiences and think about what they can do for the world besides building ever larger houses and buying ever more things for themselves.

And needless to say, China's rise in economic power in the last three decades has been achieved by hard work in a largely peaceful process, of which its people deserve to be proud.

However, three decades are just a short period of time. China's development must last for a long time before it can substantially improve the general welfare of its people. And the rebuilding of such a colossal country is bound to involve many tasks rarely required in other countries.

There are plenty of cases in world history where big powers' rise was interrupted by their own mistakes, from waging stupid wars to ignoring environmental changes. China itself has many stories to tell about its past dynastic ups and downs.

WANT TO READ SOMETHING DIRTY? TRY STATE STATUTES

TOPEKA CAPITAL JOURNAL

Here's how you do it. First go to www.kslegislature.org. At the upper left corner of that page you will find the word "Statutes." Click on that word.

That will bring up the search engine to help you find a state statute on any subject you like. You can search two ways: You can type in the statute number – in this case 21-4301 – or in a different box you can type a keyword to search for – in this case "obscenity" works.

For those of you without Internet access, I offer a sampling of that state law, with words deleted that can't be printed in the newspaper:

"Any material or performance is 'obscene' if ... the average person applying contemporary community standards would find that the material or performance has patently offensive representations or descriptions of (i) ultimate sexual acts, normal or perverted, actual or simulated, including sexual intercourse or sodomy, or (ii) $$($& ($&)$) $& ($&)*$) *$& ..."

SADDAM'S HALF-BROTHER BEHEADED IN DOUBLE EXECUTION

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The Iraqi government's attempt Monday to close a chapter on Saddam Hussein's repressive regime — by hanging two of his henchmen — appeared to anger many of Saddam's fellow Sunni Muslims after the former leader's half brother was decapitated on the gallows.

Barzan Ibrahim plunged through the trap door and was beheaded by the jerk of the thick rope at the end of his fall, in the same the execution chamber where Saddam was hanged sixteen days earlier.

A government video of the hanging, played at a briefing for reporters, showed Ibrahim's body passing the camera in a blur.

The decapitation appeared inadvertent, and Iraqi officials seemed anxious to prove they hadn't mutilated Ibrahim's remains.

The hangings came as a suicide car bomber slammed into an Iraqi army patrol in the northern city of Mosul Monday, killing seven people and wounding 40 others, police said. At least 55 people were killed or found dead across Iraq, authorities said.

The U.S. military, meanwhile, announced the deaths of two more soldiers, both killed in Baghdad.

Ibrahim's co-defendant, Awad Hamed al-Bandar, head of Saddam's Revolutionary court, died as expected — swinging at the end of a rope. Both men met death at 3 a.m. wearing reddish-orange prison jumpsuits.

Prosecutor Jaafar al-Mousawi said Ibrahim looked tense and protested his innocence as he was brought into the chamber. The condemned man once ran Saddam's feared security agency, the Mukhabarat.

MEXICAN PRESIDENT LAUNCHES PROGRAM TO STEM MIGRATION

MEXICO CITY — President Felipe Calderon launched a program Monday to create jobs for young Mexicans and curb the flow of millions of migrants to the United States.

The program will give cash incentives to companies for hiring first-time job holders. Calderon, who took office in December, campaigned on promises to boost employment opportunities in Mexico, vowing to be the "Jobs President."

A conservative who narrowly won the July election, Calderon is under pressure from a strong leftist opposition to alleviate poverty affecting half the country's citizens.

While he has criticized U.S. immigration policies, he says Mexico must stem the tide of immigration by increasing opportunities at home.

"Employment is the biggest door to get out of poverty. It is the only path to substantially raise a family's quality of life," Calderon said as he signed a decree for the "National First Job Program" in the presidential palace. "To move Mexico forward, we have to create more and better jobs."

Events to promote nonviolence and religious diversity

By Willow Williamson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Gandhi, King, Ikeda, a legacy of building peace" will be presented Tuesday through Thursday in the K-State Student Union.

Donald Fallon, coordinator of religious activities on campus and adviser for the Student Committee on Religion, coordinated many of the series of four events. He said the committee plans an inter-faith dialogue every year.

This year the committee will focus on the legacy of peace left by Martin Luther King, but it also wants to highlight other peace leaders like Daisaku Ikeda and Mahatma Gandhi, Fallon said.

A nationally-renowned exhibit honoring King, Mahatma Gandhi and Daisaku Ikeda and their efforts to build a more peaceful world will be in the Union K & S Ballroom Tuesday through Thursday. Part of the exhibit includes 20-minute films about the three men, shown at noon, 4 and 7 p.m.

Three K-State students, along with Phyllis Goodson, regional director of Soka Gakkai International (SGI)-USA, a national Buddhist association, will present a panel dialogue at noon Tuesday in the Union K & S Ballroom. Each will represent different faiths and one of the featured men.

Mariko Price, graduate student in speech communications, will represent the Buddhist faith and Ikeda.

"This exhibition will contribute to increasing awareness of religious diversity and promoting inter-faith dialogue," she said.

Careem Gladney, junior in accounting, will represent the Christian faith and, while Mohan Ramaswamy, a science librarian at Hale Library, will represent the Hindu faith and Gandhi.

Goodson will present a lecture "Building Peace," following the opening dialogue at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the Union K & S Ballroom.

Fallon said the series of events is taking place because of a need to focus on the violence on campus and throughout the world and what students and faculty can do to find peace.

Many organizations on campus are using this program on the legacy of peace and nonviolence for the Martin Luther King Jr. week, he said.

"All these groups are lifting up Martin Luther King Jr.'s dream," he said. "That is that we can live together in peace."

Surprise of the game

Stefhon Hannah's poor performance

The junior college transfer who originally committed to K-State before deciding to attend Missouri, Hannah was less than impressive against the Wildcats. He got into early foul trouble, played just 24 minutes and scored only seven points — eight below his season average of 15.

Turning point

Late second half: Brown misses dunk; K-State extends lead

With less than one minute to play and K-State clinging to a 79-74 lead, Missouri junior Marshall Brown stole a pass from K-State junior Clent Stewart and had a breakaway dunk attempt with nobody around him. But Brown clanged his one-handed attempt off the back rim, and K-State collected the rebound and began icing the game from the free throw line.

Stat of the game

24

The Wildcats out-rebounded the Tigers 41-17 — a difference of 24 — by far their most dominating performance on the glass this season. However, the Wildcats also committed a season-high 24 turnovers, falling victim to Missouri's full-court pressure too often.

Game MVP

After having to endure a week-long "what-if" game from fans who would have preferred to have Stefhon Hannah in the K-State backcourt, Clent Stewart responded by turning in one of the best performances of his career. He finished with a team-high 19 points, collected five rebounds and had a pair of steals. He also played well defensively, drawing a charge call late in the first half and pressuring the Missouri backcourt throughout the game.

Stewart silences critics

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Sometimes an empty can makes the most noise.

JEFF
RAKE

On Saturday against Missouri, that was K-State junior Clent Stewart. All week long, Stewart heard about how his play is uninspiring and how the Wildcats would be better off had they been able to land Missouri guard Stefhon Hannah, a highly regarded junior college player.

As you might recall, Hannah signed a letter of intent last spring to play for coach Bob Huggins, until his mother decided she'd rather he play for Missouri and first-year coach Mike Anderson.

With Hannah off to a tremendous start for the Tigers (he's averaging 15 points and nearly five assists per game), many K-State fans were playing the "what-if" game prior to Saturday's tipoff — with good reason.

One could argue Hannah would be a significant upgrade over Stewart. He would give the Wildcats a more consistent scorer and certainly is the better all-around talent.

But I'd take heart before talent any day, and I'd put Stewart's heart against anybody in the Big 12 Conference.

Sure, Stewart played great against Missouri. He tied a career-high with 19 points and finished with five rebounds and a pair of steals. Still, it was the way he responded after a bad play that caught my attention.

Late in the first half, Stewart had the ball stolen from him at midcourt by — you guessed it — Hannah. Rather than putting his head in his hands and allowing Hannah to drive to the basket uncontested, Stewart immediately raced back toward the other end of the floor.

Stewart beat Hannah to a spot a few feet in front of the basket and drew a charge, a call that sparked several boos from the 7,340 fans in attendance at Mizzou Arena.

It was the type of play few players in college basketball would make, or even attempt to make. As fans, it's the type of play to which we don't pay much attention. We'd rather watch players dunk basketballs with their feet.

Truth be told, it's those kind of hustle plays that win games.

Huggins had nothing but praise for Stewart after K-State's 85-81 win over Missouri. He talked about how hard Stewart has worked and how much he has improved, specifically on the defensive side of the ball.

It sounded as though Huggins was glad he had Stewart on his team, and he appreciated the way Stewart plays the game.

With a few more performances like the one he had Saturday, it's only a matter of time before the fans come to appreciate him, too.

Wildcats tame Tigers

Despite turnovers, Cats use strong rebounding to win on the road

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

COLUMBIA, Mo. — In jeopardy of losing four straight games for the first time in his 25-year coaching career, Bob Huggins challenged his players to step up their play and steal a road win against Missouri.

His team responded.

Behind a career-high 19 points from junior Clent Stewart, the Wildcats (11-6, 1-2 Big 12) defeated the Tigers 85-81 Saturday at Mizzou Arena, earning their first Big 12 Conference win of the season.

Their reward? A happier Huggins.

"When he loses, he's miserable," junior David Hoskins said. "He's much more fun to be around when he's winning, so that's what we try to do."

Through the first 26 minutes, it didn't seem like the Wildcats had a chance at losing. They built a 56-40 lead with 13:36 to go and successfully broke the Tigers' full-court pressure.

Then the Wildcats got careless with the basketball (committing a season-high 24 turnovers) and allowed the Tigers (11-5, 0-3 Big 12) to pull within 75-73 after a 3-pointer by J.T. Tiller with 1:58 left to play.

But that was as close as the Tigers would come. The Wildcats converted 10-of-12 free throws in the final 1:34 — including a pair by senior Cartier Martin with seven seconds remaining to put the game away.

The Wildcats finished 37-of-43 from the free throw line.

Far left: Cartier Martin fights for a loose ball in the first half of the Wildcat's 85-81 win over Missouri. Martin scored 15 points and grabbed six rebounds against the Tigers.

Left: Clent Stewart goes up for a shot against Missouri's Stefhon Hannah in the Wildcat's 85-81 win over the Tigers. Stewart scored a career-high 19 points in Columbia, Mo., at Mizzou Arena.

COLLEGIAN

"We knew coming in that they like to pressure the ball, and we just needed to attack the rim and get to the free throw line as much as possible," Stewart said. "I think we did that."

That wasn't all the Wildcats did. K-State dominated the boards, out-rebounding the Tigers 41-17 — paving the way to 12 second-chance points and giving the Wildcats plenty of additional scoring opportunities.

"When you throw it out of bounds like we do, it's really important," Huggins said. "You have to figure out how to get the ball back. We had to get more than one shot. That was one of our points of emphasis coming into the game."

Hoskins finished with 18 points, and seniors Martin and Lance Harris scored 15 points and 16 points, respectively. Junior Blake Young scored 11 points.

With the score tied at 20 and 9:04 left in the first half, the Wildcats used a 12-2 run to take a 32-22 lead with 3:57 to go. During that stretch, Missouri's Leo Lyons committed two turnovers and was called for an intentional foul, helping K-State's scoring run. The Wildcats were able to maintain the lead and took a 39-29 advantage into the half.

The win marked the fourth-straight season in which the Wildcats have started conference play with a 1-2 record. In all four seasons, the Wildcats have followed two losses with a win.

In defeat, Missouri junior Marshall Brown scored a season-high 28 points on 9-of-13 shooting. He had a critical miss, however, after a wide-open one-handed dunk attempt clanged off the back rim with less than one minute to play.

A make would have cut the Wildcat lead to three points. Instead, Stewart grabbed the rebound, was fouled and extended K-State's lead to four at the free-throw line.

Defense, shooting keys to victory over Missouri

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Perhaps Missouri coach Cindy Stein said it best: "There's a winter storm warning out tonight, and I think the name of that storm is the Kansas State Wildcats."

This was appropriate, as the Tigers were unable to weather the Wildcats' tough defensive play and strong shooting and fell 81-66 Saturday night at Bramlage Coliseum. The loss dropped Missouri to 13-4 overall and 1-3 in Big 12 Conference play.

The Tigers started out with a 2-0 lead in the first half, but were soon overtaken when a jump shot from Marlies Gipson brought the score to 4-2. The next — and last — time Missouri led the ballgame was with 14:59 remaining in the first when a 3-point shot from senior Carlynn Savant gave the Tigers a 10-9 edge.

K-State (14-2, 2-1 Big 12) responded with a 3-pointer from senior Claire Coggins, which jumpstarted a 13-2 K-State run that gave the Wildcats a 10-point lead with 8:50 remaining in the half. The Tigers were able to narrow the gap, however, and brought the score to 32-29 at halftime.

Missouri maintained that momentum in the second half, tying the game at 38 with 16:21 remaining. The Wildcats responded with a 24-13 run and extended their lead to 13 with 6:43 left in the half.

K-State never let down its intensity and was able to finish with a 15-point lead.

"I think obviously that run was very big for us," Coggins said. "We had talked about coming out in the second half wanting to make a run, and once we got up, unlike the first half, keep our lead, and that run just ignited us."

Missouri was led by the strong performances of seniors Tiffany Brooks and EeTisha Riddle. Brooks scored a game-high 26 points, and Riddle had the only double-double of the evening with 13 points and 10 rebounds. Riddle has averaged 16.3 points per game this season and scored 31 points during the Tigers' 79-77 loss to Texas on Jan. 10.

"When we were preparing for Missouri, we knew we had to bring a great deal of attention to (Riddle), but this is a team where we felt they can score from a lot of different places on the floor," coach Deb Patterson said. "I thought our players did a really excellent job by committee in trying to hold Riddle below that 25- or 22-point game that we know on some nights she's capable of bringing."

K-State was led by Gipson, who had 18 points, nine rebounds and five assists. Coggins also put in a strong performance with 16 points, which included connecting on 4-of-4 shots from behind the arc.

Sophomore guard Shalee Lehning finished with 14 points, and junior Kimberly Dietz added 12 points and seven assists.

Umbehr then motioned some items, mostly photos, taken from Uhlarik's home be limited and not used as evidence. Judge Wilson denied limiting most of these items.

Finally, Umbehr asked for a reason why the courts approved RCPD access to Uhlarik's call records. This led to another motions hearing, scheduled for Feb. 16.

Umbehr would not comment on how he felt the hearing went.

"This is a very weak case that the state has based on circumstantial evidence, so any little thing can tip it," he said.

Fields also declined to comment on the hearing. In response to Umbehr's comment, she said the state has an obligation to proceed with a case they think can be proven.

Uhlarik's trial is set to begin at 9 a.m. April 4-5.

'Borat's' Baron Cohen takes home Golden Globe

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The stars shone brightly at the 64th annual Golden Globes Monday night at the Beverly Hilton.

The Best Performance by an Actress In A Supporting Role in a Motion Picture award went to "Dreamgirls" Jennifer Hudson. A teary-eyed Hudson dedicated her award to former Supreme Florence Ballard, upon whose life Hudson's Effie White was loosely based.

Another "Dreamgirls" cast member, Eddie Murphy, took home the Best Supporting Actor in a Comedy or Musical award and the film took home the Globe for Best Motion Picture—Musical or Comedy.

Best Actress in a Musical or Comedy went to Meryl Streep for her portrayal of "boss from hell" Miranda Priestly in "The Devil Wears Prada."

Sacha Baron Cohen took home Best Actor in a Musical or Comedy for his leading role in "Borat: Cultural Learnings of America for Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazakhstan." In his speech, he stuck to his regular accent and described a very graphic scene with one of his co-stars.

The drama category was next, with Forest Whitaker of "The Last King of Scotland" and Helen Mirren of "The Queen" picking up their respective globes for Best Actor and Actress. "Babel" took home Best Picture—Drama.

"Grey's Anatomy" was named Best Television Series—Drama and "Ugly Betty" won Best Television Series—Musical or Comedy.

Best Actor in a Television Series—Musical or Comedy went to Alec

Baldwin for "30 Rock." Newcomer America Ferrera made little girls proud when she took home the honor of Best Actress in a Television Series—Musical or Comedy for "Ugly Betty."

Hugh Laurie took the top honor in the drama category for "House M.D.," and Kyra Sedgwick took the Best Actress nod for my personal favorite, "The Closer."

Overall the show ran smoothly, though the presence of a host would have made it more entertaining.

For years Zack Bradley (Dane Cook) has been working hard at hardly working at the local Super Club. That's until a hottie named Amy (Jessica Simpson) becomes the new cashier. After discovering she's willing to date the next guy to become "Employee of the Month," Zack takes on current titleholder (Dax Shepard) in a super-smackdown to see who will win the honor - and Amy's heart - in this outrageous comedy that proves you can't succeed at life and love till you get your shift together.

"The Protector"

A young fighter named Kham (Tony Jaa) must go to Australia to retrieve his stolen elephant. With the help of a Thai-born Australian detective, Kham must take on all comers, including a gang led by an evil woman and her two deadly bodyguards.

"Texas Chainsaw Massacre: The Beginning"

On one last road trip before they're sent to serve in Vietnam, two friends (Taylor Handley and Matthew Bomer) and their girlfriends (Dora Baird and Jordana Brewster) get into an accident calling local sheriff (R. Lee Ermey) to the scene. Thus begins a terrifying experience where the teens are taken to a secluded house of horrors where a young, would-be killer is being nurtured.

"Gridiron Gang"

Sean Porter (Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson) is a frustrated juvenile probation officer. Desperately looking for a way to make a difference, he and his co-worker Malcolm Moore (Xzibit, TV's "Pimp My Ride") devise a plan to teach discipline and responsibility through the game of football.

"Pulse"

When their computer hacker friend accidentally channels a mysterious wireless signal, a group of coeds rally to stop a terrifying evil from taking over the world.

"Undisputed II: Last Man Standing"

Sequel to the 2002 film. This time, Heavyweight Champ George "Iceman" Chambers (Michael Jai White) is sent to a Russian jail on trumped-up drug charges. In order to win his freedom he must fight against the jailhouse fighting champ Uri Boyka (Scott Adkins) in a battle to the death. This time he is not fighting for a title, he is fighting for his life.

Lead singer of Plastic Parachute, Deb Hooks, sings during the opening song Friday night. Plastic Parachute performed at PJs a little over two years ago and enjoyed Manhattan, so they moved to the Little Apple from Los Angeles to write their new album.

Ready for a break from the city, West Coast band relocates to Manhattan

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first time Plastic Parachute's lead singer Deb Hooks intensely wailed into her microphone at P.J.'s Bar Friday night, the audience responded in similar fashion. Both would spend the next hour echoing each other, with the band and its fans causing the pub's floors literally to shake on more than one occasion.

But of the numerous enthusiastic attendees that crowded into P.J.'s that night, it's very doubtful any gratitude was directed toward what partly is responsible for Plastic Parachute's recent performances in Manhattan: a heat wave that took place six months ago and 1,500 miles away.

As of this past July, the members of Plastic Parachute were in Los Angeles, home to the indie, pop-rock quintet when they weren't touring relentlessly, playing 200-plus live shows a year. But as last summer's heat wave took its toll on L.A., a city of power outages and chaos wasn't ideal for an up-and-coming band to relax, write and record new music, according to Hooks.

"We had discussed with our record producer the possibility of going somewhere else to take a break and write some new material, and he approved it," said Hooks, the lone female member in the band. "With all that was going on, I think we were all ready for a break from the city."

Amid discussions of where the band would next call home, a question arose: "What about that one Kansas town we played in a couple of years ago?"

Hooks said the band looked up housing prices in Manhattan, and that night they were en route to the Little Apple.

"It was seriously two in the morning, and we just immediately packed up and left," Hooks said. "We pretty much said, 'Let's get gas and head to Kansas.'"

Up to that point, Plastic Parachute's only stop in Manhattan had been two years before when the band played a show at P.J.'s.

"The first time we came here, everyone we met seemed really friendly and really cool," said Ricky Brewer, lead guitar for the band. "And for a small town, Manhattan really has a solid, supportive local music scene. But Manhattan also seemed to be a laid-back, quiet place where we didn't know anyone, and it would allow us to focus on writing our new material."

Along with writing new tunes since their arrival in Manhattan, Hooks, Brewer, Brian Lewis, Michael Angelo Brewer, and Clint Plastic Parachute performs to a packed PJs Bar Friday night. The performance was the third of the evening and the second performance at PJs for Plastic Parachute.

Johnston have been performing their Cars-meets-No Doubt-meets-Foo Fighters style of music through their vibrant, energetic live shows.

Besides performing to a new fan base, there is one other aspect the entire band has enjoyed during its time in Manhattan.

"It's such a relief to live in an actual house," said Lewis, rhythm guitar for the band. "We've come from living in RV's and one-bedroom apartments, sleeping in our vans and on the beach, pretty much living on top of one another. It's nice for each of us to have our privacy, and we also have our practice studio down in the basement. It's been really great."

Despite the months they've enjoyed in small-town Kansas, the band members will head back to L.A. sometime in July. Upon their return to the big city, the band will begin to tour, as well as record the music it has been writing during its stay in Manhattan.

"I really feel like living here has influenced our music," Hooks said. "The new stuff we're writing is different than our older material, and I think the people and atmosphere of the town have influenced that. As far as I'm concerned, we really couldn't have chosen a better place to do this than Manhattan."

Four men charged with theft

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four men were charged Sunday with theft of three sheets of plywood from St. Charles Circle in Manhattan, said Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department.

Preston Freeman and Mark Rosel, both of Manhattan, and Austin Hausmann, Lawrence, and Anthony Greer, Liberal, Kan., were charged with the theft from Drew P. Brokenicky.

Freeman, Greer and Rosel were all charged with theft, while Hausmann faces theft, obstruction of justice and minor in consumption charges, Quintanar said.

The obstruction of justice charge stemmed from Hausmann providing false information to the RCPD officer, Quintanar said.

When questioned by the officer as to why they needed three sheets of plywood, the subjects said they needed it to build something, Quintanar said.

"They were going to build a beer pong table," Quintanar said.

Businesses victims of graffiti

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Eight local businesses and residences were vandalized Saturday, said Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department.

UMB Bank, Crum's Beauty College, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and Ryan Realty were the businesses suffering damage to their buildings.

In addition, two local residences at 2310 Heartland Dr. and 915 Fremont St. reported damage, Quintanar said.

One resident of Cheney, Kan., also reported damage to her residence. The spray painting was of letters in a dark gray paint, Quintanar said, and the letters spelled "JS" and either "Dice" or "Vice."

"It was kind of hard to read," he said.

The total damages were $420.

Women in engineering and science meet for food and networking

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Women lined up Tuesday evening in the Alumni Center to build better relationships with students in engineering and science and indulge themselves with chocolate.

As they entered the room, the aroma of chocolate welcomed the women to the annual Chocolate Fest. At the front of the room was a long table with pretzels, melted chocolate, strawberries, chocolate chip cookies, chocolate cones filled with chocolate mousse, brownies, coconut-covered cakes, marshmallows, bananas and wafers.

As she was waiting in line, Keira Masters, freshman in industrial engineering, said she came for the chocolate.

"It's kind of hard to resist," she said.

However, the chocolate was only an incentive for the women to be there. It was one of the annual events for the Women in Engineering and Science program, which serves women from 17 departments in the engineering and science program.

"It is for the women to build a network of people that support their success," said Kimberly Douglas, director of Women in Engineering and Science Program. "It helps create connections that can help support their success."

Jenny Combes, freshman in information systems, said she wanted to meet more people through the event.

"I don't have many girls in my classes," she said. "It's nice to know there are other girls out there."

More than 90 women participated in last year's Chocolate Fest. This year, only 62 women participated. Douglas said the lack of women at this year's Chocolate Fest could be because of the timing of the event.

"They probably feel too guilty to come and eat chocolate," she said with a chuckle. "I think it will probably be a fall event in the future."

Samantha Butler, junior in architectural engineering, said last year's Chocolate Fest had a little more science to it, as engineers from Blue Bunny gave a presentation.

"Last year we had it bring in science with food," said Butler, the project manager for the Women Mentoring Women, a part of the Women in Engineering and Science Program. "It was a huge success, so we decided to keep Chocolate Fest."

Butler said bringing people together for events like Chocolate Fest can be hard to do.

"It's difficult to find something to do with large groups," she said. "We want to draw everyone and have a great learning experience."

Organization promotes peace, remembers leaders

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A modern face was given to Martin Luther King and Mahatma Gandhi's message of nonviolence last night at the K-State Student Union.

Phyllis Goodson, vice general director of Soka Gakkai International, introduced the message of Daisaku Ikeda through a speech entitled "The faces of peace."

"Through the message of these three leaders, we receive a model as to how we can collectively dedicate ourselves to peace through things as simple as dialogue," Goodson said.

The Soka Gakkai is an international organization that promotes peace in 190 countries. Started under the tradition of Nichiren Buddhism, members support nonviolence and understanding worldwide.

The crowd learned the message and practices of Daisaku Ikeda, president of the Soka Gakkai and international peace advocate.

After the war, Ikeda met peace advocate Josei Toda, the second president of Soka Gakkai who became his mentor. Since 1945, Ikeda has traveled to over 50 nations spreading his message of peace.

In recognition of his work, Ikeda has received numerous awards, like the United Nations Peace Award. However, parallels between Ikeda and history's influential peacemakers do not stop at recognition.

"In Japan, Ikeda struggled just like King and Gandhi and shares the same message of respect that has been celebrated in America," said Mark Jones, member of the Soka Gakkai.

Goodson noted her speech was not to be taken as a lecture but an inspiration to today's generation.

"Look for something that is important to you, and take a stand," she said.

Ramada undergoes renovation, becomes Holiday Inn

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Visitors who were regulars at the Ramada Inn across the street from the K-State Student Union might have noticed some changes since December — it's now a Holiday Inn.

Manhattan Hospitality, the company that owns the hotel, spent in excess of $7 million renovating the hotel.

However, the renovations weren't done with the intent to attract the Holiday Inn Hotels and Resorts company, owner Colin Noble said.

"We decided it was time to upgrade the hotel, so we embarked on a scheme to update the Ramada," he said.

This was in late 2005, but the company soon heard a Holiday Inn franchise was available in the area.

Noble said his company decided to get the Holiday Inn Select logo, which he said is a rung above the typical green Holiday Inn sign.

However, halfway through the process, Holiday Inn decided to upgrade and did away with the Holiday Inn Select classification.

Bridget McCombe, who works in product development with Noble Hospitality, Manhattan Hospitality's parent company, said guests should notice a significant change in the rooms.

"We put the walls right back to the studs and redid them," she said.

Now each room features a new palette with browns, creams and blacks.

Guests also can take note of a new trickle vent system that allows for better air quality in the room, Noble said.

A trickle vent is a small vent below the window that slides open and allows a certain amount of air into the room. After a shower, for example, a trickle vent can be used to get some of the steam out of the room, Noble said. This is the first hotel in Kansas to have such a system, he said.

"Quality of air is kind of the new buzz word in hotels," Noble said.

This concept also is shown in the hotel's new policy of being completely smoke free, meaning smoking rooms are nonexistent.

On a slower night, a standard room will cost about $80, Noble said.

The renovations have led to a price increase, but Noble said he doesn't expect complaints.

"Prices have gone up because what we are offering is a better product," he said.

Although the hotel has just finished with a large renovation, Noble said the company is still looking to the future.

A two-story atrium will be built on the side of the hotel that will serve as a place for weddings and photography, Noble said. It should be completed in spring 2008, he said.

The Holiday Inn, formerly the Ramada Inn, is in the process of making numerous renovations to the building, including new paint, air vents, and the elimination of smoking rooms. Renovations should be completed in spring 2008. Catrina Rawson COLLEGIAN

K-State to collaborate with Big 12 schools for engineering courses

Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Universities in the Big 12 Conference are collaborating to offer nuclear engineering programs online.

Mo Hosni, professor and head of the Department of Mechanical and Nuclear Engineering, said there are only four schools that have nuclear engineering programs. The schools will be working together to offer undergraduate and graduate courses to the other eight schools.

Hosni is one of the project's leaders and said the four universities in the Big 12 Conference that have a nuclear engineering program are K-State, University of Texas-Austin, Texas A&M University and the University of Missouri-Columbia.

Bill Dunn, associate professor of mechanical and nuclear engineering, said nuclear engineering is a curriculum that does not attract large numbers of students.

"It's a very demanding field, and it's not traditional," he said. "The last 20 years or so, there's been a negative mindset about nuclear engineering."

Dunn said while universities offer many other engineering programs, nuclear engineering did not exist before the 1950s.

"They're just sort of established fields, and nuclear engineering is the new kid on the block," he said.

Sue Maes, co-director of the K-State Institute for Academic Alliances and one of the project's leaders, said attention has turned towards nuclear engineering because of a job shortage.

"The engineers are now ready to retire, and there's quite a bit of interest to fill this workforce shortage," Maes said. "A lot of students don't know a lot about nuclear engineering. That's going to give them a pretty good leg up."

Dunn said the project pro-

TO THE POINT Students can prevent diabetes with diet, exercise

In our lifetime, incidence of diabetes has more than doubled.

Prevalence of the disease increased from about 6 million to 14.7 million between 1984

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

and 2004, or roughly the span of an average college student's life, according to data from the Centers for Disease Control.

Despite its low profile, diabetes affects 7 percent of the U.S. population and is responsible for a barrage of serious symptoms, like heart disease, kidney failure and blindness.

While an estimated 14.7 million have been diagnosed in the United States, 6.2 million people are unaware they have the disease.

The numbers might seem no more appalling than statistics for any other disease, but Type 2 diabetes often is preventable. The condition is caused when the body stops responding to natural insulin, a hormone that regulates blood sugar.

Regular exercise and a healthy diet can reduce the risk of this kind of diabetes, especially for those who are genetically predisposed. Obesity also contributes to the risk of developing Type 2 diabetes, so it's important to maintain a healthy body weight, according to the American Diabetes Association.

The prevalence of diabetes is in part due to our lifestyles and the choices we make. Rather than following the lead of our parents' generation, we should curb this trend and set a precedent for the next.

To help you calculate your risk of diabetes or learn more about it, take the Diabetes Risk Test at www.diabetes.org/risk-test.jsp.

Bush should re-evaluate Iraq plan, listen to advice from lawmakers

Amid the criticism against President Bush's decision last week to increase U.S. troops in Iraq, he says he will move forward with his plan, despite lawmakers' wishes.

As expected, the Democrat-run Congress has expressed heavy opposition, with plans to confront the president with a non-binding resolution this week against troop "surge," according to a USA Today report. Democrats and a growing contingent of Republicans in a bipartisan Iraqi war committee also have expressed concern with the new move. The president can no longer rely on Congress for a nod of approval.

"I fully understand they could try to stop me from doing it," Bush said on CBS' "60 Minutes" Sunday. When asked whether he should have power over Congress, Bush said, "In this situation, I do, yeah ... I made my decision, and we're going forward."

By adding 21,500 soldiers and Marines to the 132,000 troops now, Bush believes he can curb sectarian violence in Iraq. This effort is made so "the will of the 12 million people that voted in Iraq can be realized," he said.

Yes, I get it; we went to Iraq to fight threats against the United States. We went there to tell the world we weren't going to sit back and be bullied. We went there to defend people who needed some help.

It's like a fairy tale in which the hero Bush rides up on his white stallion and saves the people of the Iraqi village — those poor people suffering at the hands of a dictator. With the execution of Saddam Hussein two weeks ago and with the hanging of his half-brother and top aide Monday, you might say the tale did have a happy ending — though gruesome — that could fit into the Grimm Brothers' fairy tales.

"What happens in the Middle East matters to the security of this country," Bush said. "We learned that lesson on September the 11th. We've gotta succeed in chasing down terrorists as well as helping young democracies survive."

The Sept. 11 attacks cannot be political leverage anymore. While that day will forever remain in the lives of Americans, our president must realize the events of Sept. 11 are done with, finished, kaput. The story is getting old.

We need a real understanding of what this war is and why we need more of our family members there when 3,000 American men and women have already died. Why should Americans rebuild the world when we have problems of our own to solve?

When this war started in 2003, the Office of Management and Budget said it would cost between $50 billion and $60 billion to finish this war. We've reached the $400 billion mark. If Bush has his way, with the U.S. staying until we eliminate every last terrorist in Iraq, we will always be there. We might as well adopt it as the 51st state and plan to pay billions more; we're going to be there for a long time.

Iraq can no longer be a pawn in our game. We need to let them redevelop as a nation. If we try to control Iraq, we are no better than Hussein. We will only impose Western ideals on a country not ready for such a radical change. Adding troops to Iraq will not make this war any more complete.

We need to sit down with the leaders of Iraq and build strong international relations, rather than weapons, in the reconstruction of the nation. We need to develop ways to bring our troops home. We need to put American issues back in the forefront. And what our president must do now more than ever is take the advice of his constituents and truly invest in a plan that makes sense, not just to him, but to the rest of the country as well.

Instructors should post textbook lists online

As the school year begins, there are many things to do before heading to another semester of classes; new pens and folders to buy, parking passes to pick up and extra financial aid to be responsible for. However, the biggest pain of all when it comes to new classes is buying textbooks. Ranting about how Varney's Book Store is the obvious monopoly in the area and how overpriced (or unavailable) used textbooks are has been done before.

Instead, I will say before forcing students into buying textbooks at Varney's, the entire textbook list for every class should be placed online. The Division of Continuing Education already is one step ahead with this idea. When a student attempts to enroll in a class, a description of the curriculum along with the books required comes up on the screen. The Division of Continuing Education even has included the ISBN number to make finding the books easier.

If this is available through one division of the university, then it is possible for the entire campus to have it also. Once the initial pages are set up, it would be easy to update every semester along with the class schedules.

It is unfair for students to not have a variety of possibilities when it comes to where they choose to buy textbooks. Finding the best deal when it comes to often-overpriced textbooks should be an important issue to the university.

When students have more money, they will most likely spend it on other things, whether it is an extra class, like boxing or fencing, or actually paying parking tickets on time.

According to K-State Media Relations and Marketing, this university has a lot to offer its students, like a new masters program in Children's Literature, one of the top ROTC programs in the nation, or the title of "fourth in the nation for research activity." Yet it is still unable to furnish a simple list of the books required for students to attend campus classes.

Going to Varney's to write down the textbook list and then buy them online is an inconvenience for students who simply wish to buy the required texts somewhere besides Varney's.

It is understandable that some books, like those that are published for K-State only, need to be purchased locally, but students should be able to buy other nationally and internationally published texts anywhere they please.

It should not be as hard as it is now to buy textbooks online.

K-State needs to allow students to view the textbook list. This issue will not go away until it has a resolution, especially when textbooks are more expensive than ever before and will probably continue to increase in price as publishers create newer "editions" (which really aren't very different) every single year.

MLK luncheon discusses diversity in agriculture

Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He asked the question, "Who are our people?"

Carl Butler - in his answer - addressed agriculture, diversity and education through a series of personal anecdotes.

K-State's chapter of Minorities in Agriculture, Natural Resources and Related Sciences was host to a luncheon and lecture to promote diversity in the field of agriculture Tuesday afternoon in the Flint Hills room at the K-State Student Union.

Butler, program manager for the United States Department of Agriculture and acting executive officer of operations for the MANRRS National Society, was the keynote speaker.

His lecture was titled, "Diversity: Addressing the needs of our people."

"I used to follow the common philosophy of life, which was whatever I did in life, I would do something to help black people," Butler said.

However, when he arrived in Institute, W.Va., an area with a very high poverty rate, his philosophy changed.

"A lot of these people did not even have running water," he said. "I found that these people's needs were not being met and it didn't matter what color they were - they had needs, too."

Butler told the students to achieve their goals, become educated and then help others who are less fortunate.

Butler explained to the audience of faculty, students and administrators that diversity is self-improvement.

"Embracing diversity makes you a better person," Butler said.

He said the differences in people defines diversity.

"Diversity is the celebration of our differences and how we can take those differences and gel them together for the greater good," Butler said.

Zelia Wiley, chapter adviser for MANRRS and assistant dean for the College of Agriculture, said she brought Butler to speak about diversity during the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week because he is someone students could relate to and respect.

"His lecture was very timely and meaningful for MLK week because he is an African-American male who has over 20 years of experience in the field of agriculture," Wiley said.

MANRRS is a fairly new organization at K-State. The group, which has about 35 students, is two years old, said Amber Tyler, junior in agricultural economics and president of MANRRS.

"Our goal is to increase overall knowledge in agriculture, to retain and place students in jobs upon graduation, and to teach students that agriculture is not just about cows and plows, but about science, business and technology," Wiley said.

WORLD NEWS

ISRAELI ARMY CHIEF OF STAFF RESIGNS OVER FAILURES

JERUSALEM - Israeli army commander Lt. Gen. Dan Halutz, under fire for failures in last summer's war in Lebanon, has resigned, the Defense Ministry said today.

Halutz has been under pressure to step down since the end of the 34-day war, which failed in its goals of defeating the anti-Israel militant group Hezbollah and bringing home two captured soldiers.

Israeli launched a full-scale attack on Lebanese Hezbollah guerrillas after they seized the two men and killed three other soldiers in a cross-border raid July 12.

Army Radio reported that Halutz sent his letter of resignation to Prime Minister Ehud Olmert, saying that he was taking responsibility for the outcome of the war.

"For me the concept of responsibility is everything," Halutz wrote, according to Army Radio.

Olmert and Defense Minister Amir Peretz have also come under withering criticism because of decisions made before and during the war.

In its announcement of Halutz's resignation, the military spokesman's office said Halutz decided to resign now because the dozens of military inquiries into various aspects of the war had been completed.

The spokesman's office said both Olmert and Peretz have to accept the resignation before it can go into effect.

ON A DAY OF HEAVY VIOLENCE, U.N. SAYS 34,000 IRAQI CIVILIANS WERE KILLED LAST YEAR

BAGHDAD, Iraq - Twin car bombs tore through a Baghdad university as students left classes Tuesday in the deadliest attack in Iraq in nearly two months, and the United Nations reported 34,452 civilians were slain last year, nearly three times more than the government reported.

A total of 142 Iraqis were killed or found dead Tuesday, in what appeared to be a renewed campaign of Sunni insurgent violence against Shiite targets. The sharp uptick in deadly attacks coincided with the release of U.N. figures that showed an average of 94 civilians died each day in sectarian bloodshed in 2006.

The blasts wrecked two small buses as students at Al-Mustansiriya University were lining up for the ride home at about 3:45 p.m., according to Taqi al-Moussawi, a university dean. A man wearing a suicide belt was in the expected path of fleeing students to take even more lives, but he was spotted and shot by security men before he could blow himself up, the dean said.

"The only guilt of our martyred students is that they pursued education. They belong to all religions, sects and ethnic groups," said an angry al-Moussawi, himself a Shiite.

NIGERIA CLASHES LEAVE 12 DEAD, PROMPT OIL STAFF EVACUATION

PORT HARCOURT, Nigeria - Royal

Dutch Shell evacuated staff from two oil installations in southern Nigeria, and the military boosted troop levels in the area Tuesday after a dozen village elders were killed in a riverboat attack, officials said.

Bisi Ojediran, a spokesman for Shell PLC, said only a skeleton crew remained at the two evacuated pipeline hubs in the Niger Delta region, a vast area of mangrove swamps where all of the crude in Africa's largest producer is pumped.

Production was not affected by the clashes in Rivers state, which Ojediran characterized as a community fight. He gave no details of how many staff were evacuated.

"This seems to be an inter-community problem and not a direct attack on the oil company by militants," he said.

Elsewhere in Rivers state, gunmen attacked a boat Tuesday, wounding five people including one foreigner, police said.

Three private security contractors, who spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to the media, said one Nigerian and one Asian worker were killed.

Police spokeswoman Irejua Barasua confirmed the assault and said five people were wounded. She did not confirm deaths or provide other details about the attack.

Barasua earlier in the day confirmed that 12 chiefs from various delta communities were killed overnight Sunday when assailants attacked their boat.

Public works position will be a challenge to fill, mayor says

Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City of Manhattan is looking for a new director for its Department of Public Works, according to a job listing on the city Web site.

Jeff Hancock, the former director, resigned in December. Robert Ott, city engineer, has been serving as interim director while the city looks for a replacement.

The application for the job can be found on the Web site. The deadline is March 2.

Steve Hampton, an engineer for the city, has filled many of the needs of the unfilled position, Ott said through e-mail.

"We're starting a nationwide search for a new Public Works director in order to get the most qualified candidate," Tom Phillips, mayor pro tem, said.

The responsibilities of the position, as listed in the description, include planning, managing and overseeing all facets of operations, budget and personnel within the department.

Due to the many responsibilities attached to the position, advanced levels of education are required.

According to the online packet, the applicants must have a bachelor's degree in civil engineering. They also must be licensed as a professional engineer in the state of Kansas.

Last on the list of required education experience is five to 10 years of tenure with experience from the field. The salary for the position ranges from $76,700 to $122,700.

Ott said by e-mail the director is in charge of three divisions. The Utilities division handles and treats all of the water that is used by the people of Manhattan, making it safe to drink.

The Engineering division takes care of in-house design, surveying and major road projects like the recent work on Denison Avenue.

The third division is Operations, which handles street crews, water crews and various other work crews around the city.

The process of getting a new public works director is not something that happens overnight, mayor Bruce Snead said.

"This is a several month process," Snead said. "Given the marketplace for public works directors, we know that it could be a challenge to find a new director."

Dealing with diabetes

Physical activity helps combat, control diabetes

According to the American Diabetes Association, nearly 54 million Americans are affected by pre-diabetes, a condition in which blood glucose levels are higher than normal but not yet high enough to be diagnosed as diabetes.

This condition raises the risk for developing type 2 diabetes and increases the risk of heart disease by 50 percent.

This growing epidemic is defined as a physiological condition that affects the way the body uses energy from sugar, starch and other foods. These carbohydrates do not cause diabetes. Instead, the problem involves the production of insulin in the pancreas. This hormone either is not being produced or is not being utilized properly in the body.

There are three types of diabetes. Type 1 diabetes, also known as insulin-dependent diabetes, occurs when the pancreas cannot make the insulin. These individuals account for only 5 to 10 percent of diabetes cases and most often is hereditary.

Type 2 diabetes, or non-insulin-dependent, is a metabolic disorder responsible for 90 to 95 percent of diabetes cases. This condition usually is accompanied by incidence of obesity, sedentary lifestyles and effects of aging. Not enough insulin is produced and is not used correctly, making pancreatic cells insulin-resistant. This type normally develops slowly and usually becomes evident after age 40. However, obese children are at an increased risk.

Having a close family member with the condition increases one's chances of developing this condition. Also, being older than 40, being overweight or obese, not being physically active and having low high-density lipoprotein (HDL) cholesterol levels increases the risk of developing type 2 diabetes.

The third type of diabetes is gestational diabetes, which is seen in 2 to 5 percent of pregnancies as a result of changes in hormone levels. Prevention and early detection has become increasingly important to ensure a healthy future.

The American Diabetes Association also suggests most people with pre-diabetes are likely to develop diabetes within a decade unless they make changes in both their diet and their physical activity. With diabetes, too little or no insulin, or the inability to use insulin properly hinders the body's capability to utilize energy nutrients like carbohydrates, proteins and fats. Individuals who do not have diabetes use insulin to maintain normal blood sugar levels so that eating has little effect on blood sugar. By regulating blood sugar levels, insulin in healthy people helps the body use amino acids and fatty acids from food for later energy production.

If not controlled, diabetes can be life-threatening with problems like blindness, circulatory problems, nerve disease and kidney disease or failure. Diabetes is the sixth leading cause of death in the United States.

Make healthier food selections. Choices that involve more fruits, vegetables, water and whole grains are best. Also, reduce portion size at each meal. Remember that it takes 20 minutes to "feel" full. Finally, move more each day.

It's the little lifestyle changes that might make all the difference in your future health. Don't let diabetes take over your life.

MELISSA HAUG

Top: Many diabetics inject insulin to regulate their blood sugar levels. Using syringes, they draw insulin from a vial and inject it into their body. Right: An insulin pump automatically pumps insulin into the body throughout the day. Left: Blood glucose monitors take a small sample of blood and test it for blood sugar levels. Many diabetics check their blood sugar several times a day.

Regular exercise, healthy body weight reduce risk of developing diabetes

Physical activity is crucial for leading a healthy life. Exercise helps maintain a proper body weight, keep fit and prevent disease.

But what do we do when we are unfortunate enough to be afflicted by disease? Say for instance, diabetes?

Do we give up all hope in physical activity and put our faith solely in the capabilities of medication?

The obvious answer is no. In fact, both the American College of Sports Medicine and the American Council on Exercise recently praised exercise and its benefits in combating and controlling both type 1 and type 2 diabetes.

According to ACE, when dealing with type 1 diabetes, physical activity primarily helps by increasing insulin receptor sensitivity, reducing the risk of coronary artery disease and improving functional capacity.

ACE also states exercise is vital for type 2 diabetics, since it reduces both weight and cholesterol levels and thus the risk for heart disease.

In fact, according to the Center for Disease Control, being physically active can prevent blood-flow problems, which can reduce the risk of heart disease, as well as the risk of nerve damage. These health problems can be prevalent among those who suffer from diabetes.

ACSM also recently concluded that, although physical activity is underused in the treatment of type 2 diabetes, its role in managing the disease is undeniable and should therefore be used in any case where the individual is able to regularly perform moderate levels of physical activity.

However, diabetics should not follow just any exercise plan. As with any at-risk population, it is important to consult a doctor to obtain permission before starting a workout routine.

Certain workout regimens that are suitable for the general population are unsafe for people with diabetes.

ACE also recommends that diabetics use the following guidelines when partaking in physical activity.

BBO | Rockies agree to deal with Holliday, Affeldt

DENVER — Outfielder Matt Holliday agreed to a $4.4 million, one-year contract with the Colorado Rockies on Tuesday and pitcher Jeremy Affeldt accepted to a $1.25 million, one-year deal.

The 27-year-old Holliday hit .326 with 34 homers and 114 RBIs last year, his third season in the majors, all at Colorado. He made $500,000.

Affeldt, a 27-year-old left-hander acquired from the Kansas City Royals in July, was a combined 8-8 with a 6.20 ERA in 54 games, including nine starts. He made $1 million last season.

Affeldt and Denny Bautista came to Colorado in a trade for reliever Scott Dohmann and minor league first baseman Ryan Shealy.

Right-handers Josh Fogg and Rodrigo Lopez, and outfielder Cory Sullivan were set to swap proposed arbitration salaries with the Rockies.

BBO | Cardinals, Taguchi agree on 1-year contract

ST. LOUIS — So Taguchi parlayed postseason success into a new deal with the St. Louis Cardinals.

The reserve outfielder and the Cardinals avoided arbitration on Tuesday, agreeing to a one-year contract that will guarantee him $1,025,000.

The 37-year-old helped the Cardinals win their first World Series in 24 years. He began the playoffs 4-for-4 as a pinch hitter, including a go-ahead home run off the Mets' Billy Wagner in Game 2 of the NL championship series.

He batted .266 in 134 regular-season games with two homers and 31 RBIs.

Taguchi's deal calls for a salary of $925,000 and the team has an option for 2008 at $1.1 million with a $100,000 buyout. His base salary for 2008 would increase by $100,000 each for 350 and 375 plate appearances next season, and $150,000 each for 400 and 450 plate appearances.

The contract also includes $350,000 in annual performance bonuses. Last year, Taguchi made $825,000.

St. Louis also has been negotiating with Preston Wilson, an August pickup last year.

FBC | Mike Shula interviews for Dolphins coaching job

MIAMI — The latest candidate to emerge for the Miami Dolphins' coaching job has a big edge in name recognition: he's a Shula.

Mike Shula interviewed for the job Saturday, a person familiar with the team's search said Tuesday. The person requested anonymity because the Dolphins have declined to identify candidates.

Shula's dad, Don, coached Miami for 26 years, holds the NFL record with 347 victories and is a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Hiring the younger Shula would mean a swap of coaches with Alabama. He was fired by the Crimson Tide in November and replaced by Nick Saban, who left the Dolphins on Jan. 3 after two seasons.

Two other candidates have interviewed with Miami twice: former Atlanta Falcons coach Jim Mora and Georgia Tech coach Chan Gailey. Management met with 12 coaches during the first round of interviews, which ended last Wednesday.

The 41-year-old Shula went 26-23 in four years at Alabama. The Crimson Tide fired him after they went 6-6 during the 2006 regular season and lost for the fourth year in a row to Southeastern Conference rival Auburn.

Shula said he left Alabama in better shape than the program he inherited, which was weakened by NCAA sanctions.

Shula was a Dolphins ballboy when his dad coached the team. He has spent 15 years as an NFL assistant, most recently in 2000-02 as Miami's quarterbacks coach.

Checklist for healthy blood sugar levels

1. Individuals with diabetes should check their blood glucose levels frequently and work closely with their physicians to determine the correct insulin dosage.

2. People with diabetes should always carry a rapid-acting carbohydrate (such as juice or candy) in case they develop hypoglycemia (low blood sugar).

3. Do not inject insulin into the primary muscle groups that will be used during exercise because it will be absorbed too quickly, resulting in hypoglycemia.

4. Individuals with diabetes should exercise at the same time each day for better control.

5. Avoid exercise during periods of peak insulin activity.

6. A carbohydrate snack should be consumed before and during prolonged exercise.

7. People with diabetes need to take good care of their feet, regularly checking for cuts, blisters or signs of infection. Good quality exercise shoes are very important.

8. Physicians will usually instruct their patients to check their blood glucose level before and after exercise, keeping it within a strict range.

Note: These guidelines are a summary of those given by the American Council on Exercise.

Although strength training is important in all fitness regimens, diabetics should focus mainly on endurance activities, like jogging or cycling, that will stress their aerobic capabilities. They should exercise at an intensity that is 50 to 60 percent of their maximal heart rate, gradually progressing to 60 to 70 percent. Diabetics should exercise four to seven days a week, with each session lasting 20 to 30 minutes for those with type 1 diabetes and 40 to 60 minutes for those with type 2 diabetes.

ENGINEERING | K-State, 3 other Big 12 schools cooperate to offer online nuclear engineering courses

poses that the universities without the department offer students a certificate or a minor for nuclear engineering to complement their study in engineering.

Hosni said students from the universities who do not have the nuclear engineering program will have tuition assistance for the courses they take online.

"It is an incentive for them to take courses, because they are not familiar with the nuclear engineering program," Hosni said.

Since the program is new, this semester only two universities, Texas and Missouri, are offering the courses, Hosni said.

"At this time we have limited it to Big 12 universities, but we think that in the future we will be expanding that and allowing other students to take courses," he said.

In addition, K-State is offering a graduate course this semester to students at Texas.

Dunn said the project idea was generated by former K-State Dean of Engineering Terry King in a meeting with other deans in the Big 12 Conference.

King suggested schools share nuclear engineering programs due to fast-growing departments and the expenses it would cost to establish new departments at other universities, Dunn said.

the not-so-funny antics of ANDY DICK

"Andy Dick: Do Your Shows Always Suck?"

Album review by Matt Sundberg

Andy Dick confuses me. How can a man seemingly without talent manage to keep working in Hollywood? The answer: cameos in movies. Rarely a year goes by where Dick does not make an uncomfortable cameo in a big budget movie, from "Zoolander" to "Road Trip" to "Old School," in which he often plays a gay man.

In fact, I didn't even know he was a stand-up comedian until I listened to his latest compact disc, "Andy Dick: Do Your Shows Always Suck?" The comedy album, performed before a crowd of college students, is a collection of 34 tracks with such wacky titles as "Beautiful Urinal" and "Dirty Sanchez vs. Hot Karl."

Dick starts out the show by asking the crowd if their school is a dry campus. Turns out it's not, which is good news for him. To enjoy this album, a blood alcohol level of at least 0.08 is required.

Dick's comedy is all over the place in this CD; he covers an unusually wide variety of topics including his own experiences in therapy, sexy times at the Playboy Mansion, Ellen DeGeneres, being an adopted kid, Pocahontas and even sexual activities with wombats. None of the stories relate to any of the others and the whole album is basically nothing more than Dick's stream of consciousness at that moment, with him occasionally pointing out certain people or things in the audience and commenting on them. His material is so random and nonsensical that I strongly believe he took hallucinogenic drugs before the show.

Dick also dishes out a lot of dirt about his fellow celebrities. In one track, he talks about his experiences on "Less Than Perfect," his failed comedy sitcom on ABC, and how he would have slept with Sara Rue, his redheaded co-star, if she wasn't fat. In another track, he talks about his own sexual relations with Trishelle from "The Real World."

About a third of the CD's 34 tracks are musical numbers, with Dick strumming his acoustic guitar and having a strange man on stage next to him sing backup vocals every few lines. As I have come to expect from Andy Dick, most of these songs are mind-numbingly ridiculous, as he sings about everything from his own curvy genitalia to chocolate martinis to "squirrels being better than girls."

When he's not singing or going off on a tangent or heckling attractive women in the audience, there really are only about 20 minutes of actual comedy in this CD, and I'm sorry to say it's not very good. Andy Dick's humor is understandably an acquired taste, and this album tastes foul. Even fans of the actor will be disappointed by this comedy routine. My advice to Mr. Dick: stop doing stand-up, and hold out for the cameo in "Old School 2."

"Andy Dick: Do Your Shows Always Suck?" will release Feb. 20.

Story behind 'Alpha Dogs' makes it worth seeing

"Alpha Dogs"

Album review by Catrina Rawson

Based on the true story of Jesse James Hollywood, the youngest person to be on the FBI's Most Wanted list, "Alpha Dog" keeps the audience hooked throughout the entire film.

The film follows a group of young people who live just as hard as they party. Johnny Truelove (Emile Hirsch) pulls all the strings in the group. After Jake Mazursky (Ben Foster) comes up short on the monetary end of a drug deal, Truelove settles the score. While driving with his friend Frankie (Justin Timberlake) they see Zack, Jake's younger brother, and decide to kidnap him. What follows are days of partying, promiscuity and hanging out with his "new friends." Soon the "vacation" is over and the situation turns life-threatening.

With many low-profile actors, the film is fast-paced suspense with quite a bit of drama. The acting sails high above what I expected, especially with Timberlake. It's hard to believe he had the acting chops for this role — since his background is mainly music — but he brought a likable quality to the character.

Bruce Willis and Sharon Stone, who portrayed Truelove's father and Markowitz's mother, added some Hollywood star power, but both have relatively smaller roles. The chemistry between the cast was good and gave the audience a sense of what it was like in 2000. The film is based on the actual kidnapping of Nicholas Markowitz, whose real-life abduction ended with tragic consequences. The film met with some resistance because he hadn't been caught yet. Jesse James Hollywood was arrested in 2005.

The trailers do the film little justice. They paint the picture of Timberlake as being a gangster (which to me is hilarious) when really, he is the character who really shows heart.

Overall, I was surprised after I saw the film. At first, I had no desire to see it, but after learning it was a true story, it gave me more of a reason to go. This movie might not be worthy of an Academy Award, but overall it was money well spent.

HOROSCOPES

Your weekly digest for Jan. 17 through Jan. 23 2007

Aquarius

You need some help this week. You can make personal changes that will enhance your reputation and give you greater self-confidence. Your partner could also use some time alone with you. You will have original ideas for ways to make extra money. Your lucky day this week will be Thursday.

Aries

Travel should be on your mind. Your charm will attract members of the opposite sex. Make sure you get legal matters checked out thoroughly. You can get good solid advice from relatives or close friends you trust. Your lucky day this week will be Thursday.

Cancer

You won't have to look for the action. Your emotional state could leave you vulnerable and confused. Get involved in jobs that require creative input. You can win points with both peers and superiors. Changes to your self-image will be to your benefit as long as you don't overpay. Your lucky day this week will be Sunday.

Capricorn

If you are not already, think about going into business for yourself. Female colleagues may be able to help you get the job done. Your involvement in sports or entertainment will lead to new romances. Get back into the swing of things. Your lucky day this week will be Tuesday.

Gemini

This is a turning point. Talk to your mate about a vacation and discuss the expectations of your relationship. Take care of your own responsibilities before you help others. Friends may not be completely honest with you. Your lucky day this week will be Saturday.

Libra

Reciprocate by offering helpful hints. You can set your goals and make a beeline for your target. You need an outlet. You must make sure that all your personal documents are in order. Your lucky day this week will be Tuesday.

Pisces

You can expect to feel confused about your personal prospects. Try not to judge too quickly. You can continue to forge ahead if you make a few long-distance calls pertinent to closing pending deals. New interests are preoccupying your time. Your lucky day this week will be Wednesday.

Leo

Opportunities to meet new lovers will evolve through your interaction with groups. Be willing to listen, but don't be fooled. You can make money if you're willing to push your ideas on those in a position to support your efforts. Your lucky day this week will be Thursday.

Scorpio

Channel your efforts into achieving your goals. Use your creative flair. A change in position could be better than you thought. Difficulties with your mate may lead to isolation. Your lucky day this week will be Wednesday.

Sagittarius

Don't let your partner upset you this week. Someone you work with could try to undermine you. Try not to attempt to do something unless you are fully intent on following through. Your lover may disappoint in such a way that estrangement will follow. Your lucky day this week will be Thursday.

Taurus

This might not be a day for hasty decisions. You can make career changes that might put you in a much higher earning bracket. Find ways to make extra cash. Start making things or reusing rather than buying ready-made. Your lucky day this week will be Tuesday.

Virgo

Mingle with those who can help you get ahead. Make amends if you can. Get into fitness programs to keep in shape. Your ambitious mood may not go over well with loved ones. Consider starting a small business on the side. Look for a marketable gimmick. Your lucky day this week will be Thursday.

Outlook for conference title remains unclear

The K-State men are beginning to look like a team under the coaching of all-time great Bob Huggins. While this season already has been full of ups and downs, the Cats continue to show improvement.

The women have been a pleasant surprise thus far, winning two of their first three Big 12 Conference games. The Wildcats are in second place after being picked to finish seventh in the coaches' preseason poll. Conference play only has been underway for a few weeks, but both teams continue to show promise.

COLUMN | Men's, women's teams showing improvement early in season

MEN

The K-State men have played three conference games, and played them all very differently. What should we expect for the rest of the season?

After watching the first conference game against Texas A&M, I was downright giddy about this season. The Wildcats went on the road and played a No. 11-ranked Aggie squad down to the last few seconds, even without Huggins' prized recruit, freshman forward Bill Walker. Last Monday's tipoff against Texas Tech could not come soon enough.

Big Monday was supposed to be the start of the Huggins era of K-State basketball. Instead, we learned Walker would miss the rest of the season, and Big Monday revealed how badly he will be missed.

The Wildcats were a completely different team against a Texas Tech squad that played sound basketball and controlled the entire game, beating K-State 62-52.

After watching the game against the Red Raiders, I became extremely pessimistic.

Last Saturday, the Wildcats traveled to Columbia, Mo., and defeated the Missouri Tigers 85-81. K-State had its best game of the season from the free throw line as they went 37-of-43 from the stripe, and also out-rebounded Missouri 41-17.

The real question is, which Wildcat team will show up for the rest of the season?

The K-State squad we should all expect to see is a combination of all three conference games, an inconsistent team that will show flashes of brilliance and flashes of mediocrity.

The NCAA Tournament seems an unlikely destination for the Wildcats at this point; a more realistic goal is the National Invitation Tournament. K-State has the talent to beat anyone in the Big 12, but they lack three key components.

This team does not have the inside scoring, consistent shooting or true point guard to be a real threat in the Big 12.

The Wildcats' schedule at home is too intense to consistently defend their home court, and although they won at Missouri, they have struggled in the past to win on the road.

The Cats will be an improving basketball team throughout the season, and finish with a respectable record.

My prediction: K-State finishes the regular season with a 19-12 record overall, and an 8-8 finish in the Big 12 en route to a bid in the NIT.

WOMEN

The No. 25-ranked K-State women have been a welcome surprise.

The early schedule in conference play was brutal for the Wildcats. They started off with an extremely tough game, traveling to Oklahoma to play the No. 7-ranked Sooners, who once again are a national powerhouse.

After falling in Norman, Okla., 78-58, the women bounced back and pulled off an upset of No. 17 Texas A&M, 48-45.

The Wildcats are led by junior guard Kimberly Dietz, who is averaging 13.2 points per game, sophomore forward Marlies Gipson, who is averaging 12.8 points and 8.3 rebounds per game and senior guard Claire Coggins, who is contributing 12.5 points per game.

The Big 12 once again is among the best conferences in the country. The Wildcats will have a tough schedule this year, including road trips to Nebraska, No. 13 Baylor, Iowa State and Texas Tech. Their home schedule also is difficult, with key games against Texas, Oklahoma State and another matchup against Nebraska.

Gipson has proven to be an extremely good player, and has the talent to lead the Cats to the NCAA Tournament. She has scored in double figures in 13 of the Wildcats' 16 games this season.

With three excellent players in Dietz, Gipson and Coggins, anything less than an NCAA Tournament berth would be a disappointment.

My Prediction: The Wildcats end the season with a 22-7 record overall and a trip to the NCAA Tournament. The women also will finish with a 10-6 record in the Big 12.

Off the Court with Lance Harris

By Jonathan Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior guard Lance Harris confessed that his mom says he looks like Usher. Both Harris and Usher routinely entertain thousands of people, but perform on different stages. Harris was raised in Columbia, Mo., home of the Missouri Tigers, which the Wildcats defeated 85-81 last Saturday. Harris scored 16 points and pulled down seven rebounds in front of his family and friends, and said returning home to play Missouri did not faze him. Before Saturday's contest, Harris answered questions ranging from his plans for the future to growing up around his dad's barber shop.

Q. Has anyone ever told you that you look like Usher?

A. No, I've never heard that. I'm just joking. I've definitely heard that before. My mom has been telling me that ever since I was about 10.

Q. Will there be a lot of friends and family at the Missouri game since you are from Columbia, Mo.?

A. Tons. Yeah, there will be tons of people there, probably about 60.

Q. Does playing in Columbia bring out any emotions on the court?

A. During my freshman and sophomore years, it was a little emotional, but now it is just like any other game — a business trip.

Q. Is it true that your dad works at a barber shop?

A. Yeah. Actually, my mom and dad work at the same barber shop.

Q. What was it like growing up around the shop?

A. It was cool. I grew up around a lot of basketball players. The (Missouri) team would come in all the time for a haircut, and there would be barber-shop gossip. You know how that goes.

Q. What topics were discussed in the barber shop?

A. A lot of sports talk and daily news, and also discussion about who is the best basketball player.

Q. What do you like to do in your free time?

A. My favorite thing to do would be play video games on my PlayStation. I only play football games, I don't really like the basketball games. Other than that I just like to relax, watch some TV and chill with my friends.

Q. What are your plans after graduation?

A. Hopefully to play basketball somewhere, semi-pro or whatever I can get my hands on.

ANALYSIS

Women expected to face tough road against Big 12 competition this season

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The No. 25-ranked Wildcats are looking to continue building a good record in Big 12 Conference play this season.

So far they own a 2-1 record in the conference and a 14-2 record overall.

If the past three games are any indication, the women's basketball team should be able to continue its winning ways.

After suffering a 78-58 loss at No. 8 Oklahoma on Jan. 3, K-State bounced back with a 48-45 upset over then-No. 17 Texas A&M on Jan. 6 at Bramlage Coliseum. The Wildcats grabbed another win, 81-66, at home against Missouri on Jan. 13.

With four returning starters in senior guard Claire Coggins, junior guard Kimberly Dietz, sophomore forward Marlies Gipson and sophomore guard Shalee Lehning, the 2006 Women's National Invitation Tournament champions have a good chance at improving upon last year's Big 12 record of 8-8. However, with the amount of conference teams returning three or more starters and the level of talent each team brings to the floor, each game could be up for grabs.

"It's definitely competitive," Gipson said. "Just seeing the same type of play every night, you have to come ready to play - everyone's ready to fight and you really have no idea, it's just an every night thing. You never know what team's going to do what."

Besides the K-State victory over A&M, there have been other upsets early during conference play.

On Jan. 3, Nebraska defeated a Texas squad that was preseason picked to finish second in the Big 12, and the No. 17 Aggies overthrew No. 13 Baylor 60-52 on Jan. 13.

For the Wildcats, the challenge

Chris Hanewinkel | COLLEGIAN
Coach Deb Patterson has K-State off to a 14-2 start and, as of Monday, ranked No. 25 in the nation. Patterson has won 213 games during her 11 years at K-State.

is being mentally prepared to learn from their mistakes, both after - and especially during - their games, coach Deb Patterson said.

"I think the positive thing for me in evaluating our first two games is that with Oklahoma, we played sporadically," Patterson said. "We competed well some possessions, and we got soft on some. I felt we took that lesson and applied it to the next game, because against Texas A&M, even when we made mistakes we were competing very, very tough and very hard. And I think in applying that to the future in Big 12 play, it's everything."

Coggins said one thing K-State needs to improve upon from last season is remaining competitive throughout every game, something that didn't always happen.

She said she thinks that has improved now the squad is more experienced.

"I think last year, you know, we just didn't finish games," she said. "We were in games, we might have even been up by 20, but we just gave games away. It's really disappointing, but it's also something that as a young team we had to learn. We're more experienced now, and I think this team understands what it's like to fight each play and not worry about getting down.

"We were down with A&M a little bit of the game, and we didn't care - we just fought back. It's just competing the whole 40 minutes."

After the win against Missouri, K-State gets the opportunity to further its winning streak at 7:05 tonight in Lincoln, Neb. against the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

Following tonight's game, the Wildcats face another tough road game Saturday against Baylor in Waco, Texas.

For Patterson, her only concern is that her team puts in the type of individual and collective effort she knows they're capable of.

"We're preseason picked seventh in the league, and so for us it's about scratching and clawing and finding a way, every night at the very least, to be extremely (tough), mentally and physically," she said.

Big 12 Preview

1. No. 7 Oklahoma — After making a run to the Sweet 16 in the 2006 NCAA Tournament, Oklahoma returns five starters, including sophomore Courtney Paris, who finished last season with an average of 21.9 points, 15 rebounds and 3.3 blocks per game. The Sooners are 12-1 this season and 3-0 in Big 12 Conference play, having already knocked off four ranked teams, including a 76-63 win against No. 13 Baylor Jan. 10.

2. No. 17 Texas A&M — The Aggies also return five starters this season, who led the team to a 23-9 overall record and a third-place finish in the Big 12 a year ago. Coach Gary Blair led the team to its first NCAA Tournament berth since 1996, and the Aggies finished the season leading the Big 12 in scoring defense. This season A&M was ranked as high as No. 10 in the Associated Press poll, but after falling to the Wildcats on Jan. 6, the team has dropped to No. 17.

3. No. 22 Texas — Lone senior Tiffany Jackson leads the Longhorns this season, averaging 19.9 points per game. Jackson recorded 25 points in the first two Big 12 outings against Nebraska and Missouri, and 16 against Colorado. The Longhorns are 13-4 overall and 2-1 in the Big 12 after losing to Nebraska on Jan. 3 in Austin.

4. No. 13 Baylor — The 2005 national champions finished second in the Big 12 last season and went to the Sweet 16 of the NCAA Tournament. The Bears lost three starters entering this season, including first-team All-American and Big 12 Player of the Year Sophia Young. That hasn't kept Baylor from a 14-3 overall start this season and a 2-2 Big 12 record. The Bears are led by senior transfer Bernice Mosby, who averages 18.1 points per game.

5. Iowa State — The Cyclones return four starters from a 2005-06 squad that finished 7-9 in the Big 12. They are led by senior Lyndsey Medders, an All-Big 12 selection last season, and sophomore Nicky Wieben, who are both averaging 12.8 points per game.

6. Nebraska — Nebraska finished 8-8 in the Big 12 last season, tied with K-State at sixth place. The Huskers have three returning starters this season, including senior Kiera Hardy, an All-Big 12 first team pick, and senior Jelena Spiric, who was the 2005 Big 12 Newcomer of the Year. The Huskers are led this season by sophomore Kelsey Griffin, who is averaging 16.2 points and 8.6 rebounds per game.

7. No. 25 K-State — The Wildcat women return four regular starters from last year's Women's National Invitation Tournament-winning squad. Not content to settle for the WNIT again, this year's team is off to a 13-2 start and recently knocked off No. 17 Texas A&M. Team leader Claire Coggins is off to a slow start, however, and will need to step up her game if the Wildcats are to compete in a very strong Big 12 Conference.

8. Texas Tech — The Lady Raiders, who were predicted to finish tied for seventh at the beginning of the season, are a team with a lot to play for and nothing to lose. Unfortunately the team (10-7) is losing more than anticipated and faces an uphill struggle to reach the post-season. Three starters return this season, but will miss last season's leading scorer LaToya Davis who graduated.

9. Missouri — Despite being picked to finish towards the bottom of the Big 12, the Tigers have come out of the gates with a full head of steam this season. The team appeared to have lost some offensive firepower with the departure of two key starters, but senior forward E'Tisha Riddle has picked up the slack, averaging 16.1 points per game this season.

10. Kansas — With a 5-11 overall record, and an 0-4 conference record to start the season, the 10th-place preseason prediction given to the Jayhawks is starting to seem generous. Due in large part to a lack of scoring, the Jayhawks are in the midst of a seven-game losing streak. Much of KU's struggles are due to inexperience as the team returns just two starters, but if the Jayhawks' season is to be salvaged, new leaders will have to emerge.

11. Colorado — The Buffaloes have been sporadic so far this season. The team is 8-7 overall, but has yet accrue a road win. The offense is led by junior forward Jackie McFarland who is averaging 19.5 points and 10.5 rebounds per game. If McFarland can stay healthy and the Buffs can find some consistency on the road, they might just be the surprise of the Big 12 this season.

12. Oklahoma State — Despite starting off the season by winning eight in a row, the Cowgirls showed why they were picked last in the Big 12 with a demoralizing 49-75 defeat at the hands of Texas Tech Jan. 6. The team rebounded by knocking off Kansas at home, but still has a lot to prove before it can be considered a legitimate contender in the Big 12.

K-State hopes to match Huggins hype

Bob Huggins enters his first year of Big 12 Conference play with a team that hasn't made the postseason since 1999. Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Better coaching should lead to team's improvement

Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Off to a 1-2 start to its Big 12 Conference season, the K-State men's basketball team is treading familiar waters.

That's because the Wildcats also started 1-2 in the previous three seasons, each time staying true to the same formula: two losses followed by a win to avoid an 0-3 start.

But this year, the Wildcats hope their fortunes take a turn for the better. That's because in each of the previous three seasons under former coach Jim Wooldridge, the Wildcats finished with a 6-10 conference record.

How quickly expectations can change.

With coach Bob Huggins now at the helm, the Wildcats have lofty goals and hope to reach the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1996.

The players are confident Huggins can get them there, and believe the team is headed in the right direction.

"We should be looking good down the road," senior Akeem Wright said.

"(Coach Huggins) knows what it takes to push some buttons and get the best effort out of you. If we do that, we should win plenty of games."

Whether the Wildcats can do that remains to be seen. They should, however, be more prepared for conference play than they had been in previous years under Wooldridge.

One of Huggins' main points of emphasis since taking over was to schedule a tough slate of non-conference games. He scheduled a trip to Cincinnati to play Xavier and also got the Wildcats involved in the Las Vegas Holiday Classic - a tournament K-State won by beating Southern California and New Mexico.

The hope is the Wildcats won't be wowed by the talent level of Big 12 teams because they already have played strong opponents along the way.

"Our expectations are high for the league," senior Cartier Martin said. "We have to get back on a little streak like we had when we started against North Dakota State and then went up to Vegas. We played good basketball up until that point, then we came back and we got kind of rusty again."

For us to be a good team, we got to get back to where we were."

Starting tonight, when Baylor comes to Bramlage Coliseum, most fans will be more concerned about where the Wildcats are headed. Clearly, the Wildcats would like to even their conference record at 2-2 and start working toward climbing the standings.

Still, they should not overlook Baylor, a team that has won five of its last seven games against the Wildcats and is coming off a 73-70 win against Texas Tech, which beat the Wildcats 62-52 Jan. 8.

At 11-5 overall, the Bears are seemingly getting back on track after being hit hard in June 2005 with NCAA penalties that put the team on probation until the 2010 season.

As for the Wildcats, they are just trying to string together some wins in the hope that they'll be able to play some meaningful games in late March.

"We're still learning things but at the same time guys are turning a corner," Martin said. "We've got to go on a bit of a streak here if we want to be one of the best in the Big 12."

Big 12 Preview

1. No. 5 Kansas — Sophomores Brandon Rush and Julian Wright are set to become legitimate superstars, while the supporting staff includes Mario Chalmers, Russell Robinson and Sasha Kaun. Fast-break points should come in numbers under coach Bill Self's offense, and as long as the Jayhawks stay free from injury, they should be considered the conference favorite.

2. No. 8 Texas A&M — Billy Gillispie has made great strides with the 0-16 team he inherited three seasons ago. The Aggies are 15-2, and their only losses came during road games at UCLA and LSU. Acie Law IV and Joseph Jones make up arguably the best inside-outside combination in the country, but Law needs some help on the perimeter if the Aggies are to be considered a serious threat to Kansas.

3. No. 12 Oklahoma State — Although the team lost longtime coach Eddie Sutton last season, the Cowboys did not miss a beat in non-conference play under new coach Sean Sutton, losing only one game. James On Curry and Mario Boggan lead the attack, but the Cowboys will need consistent play from the point guard position, which they did not receive in an 87-57 loss at Kansas on Jan. 10.

4. No. 21 Texas — Although the Longhorns lost six of their top seven scorers from last season, they brought in an outstanding class of recruits, including McDonald's All-Americans Kevin Durant and D.J. Augustin. Mix that with A.J. Abrams to rule the backcourt and Connor Atchley to clean the boards, and Texas could be able to make some noise. If Texas can make it to the last week of the conference season relatively unscathed, they will face Texas A&M and Kansas in what could be a chance at a conference title.

5. K-State — New coach Bob Huggins will have to find ways to win close games if he hopes to take the Wildcats to their first NCAA Tournament appearance in more than 10 years. Finding a consistent scorer in Cartier Martin will be a key to victory, as will the quick development of freshman center Jason Bennett. The increased defensive pressure that Huggins demands should help K-State down the stretch.

6. Texas Tech — Now the hype over coach Bob Knight achieving the all-time career wins record is over, the Red Raiders can get back to the business of the conference season. However, they will have to do so without center Esmir Rivzic, who underwent facial surgery after being elbowed by Oklahoma's Longar Longar. The key to making the NCAA tournament will be how well Jamus Jackson and Martin Zeno can lead a young, inexperienced group against the conference's top opponents. A good test should be Kansas on Saturday.

7. Baylor — Still recovering from a string of tumultuous seasons, Baylor will look for the experience of guards Aaron Bruce and Curtis Jerrells to transfer to incoming McDonald's All-American Demond "Tweety" Carter. If coach Scott Drew can do on the court what he has done in recruiting, the Bears could surprise a few teams, but are still a season away from serious contention.

8. Missouri — The speed of Missouri's return to greatness will depend on how fast Mike Anderson can untangle the program left to him by former coach Quin Snyder. Although the team won every non-conference game at home this year, last Saturday's loss to K-State in Columbia brought the Tigers back to earth. Expect transfer Stephon Hannah to develop into an All-Big 12 caliber player and for the Tigers to play tough at home against Kansas, but don't expect much else.

9. Oklahoma — After losing coach Kelvin Sampson to Indiana, the Oklahoma program continues to struggle. The key to its Big 12 season will be controlling center and leading scorer Longar, who recently was suspended two games for an elbowing incident against Texas Tech. Michael Neal is a good shooter, and could prove helpful to new coach Jeff Capel, but without Longar, Oklahoma might finish outside of the tournament field.

10. Nebraska — After a heartbreaking loss to Iowa State last week, the Cornhuskers will have to win a few unexpected games to reach the postseason. Much of their success will depend on finding support for center Aleks Maric, who is carrying the team offensively. Freshmen guards Ryan Anderson and Sek Henry, if developed, could be helpful come February.

11. Iowa State — Taking Kansas to overtime is one thing, but winning is another. The Cyclones were narrowly defeated 68-64 Saturday against the Jayhawks. Iowa State has the elements of a decent team, but is continuing to have trouble holding on to leads at home. Mike Taylor and Wesley Johnson are a decent high-low combination, but games like Saturday's overtime loss to Kansas show that while the talent might be developing, the Cyclones are not ready for dancing shoes just yet.

12. Colorado — The only goal for the Colorado program this year is to send coach Ricardo Patton off in style. Patton already has said this will be his last season with the team. This is the youngest team in the program's history, with eight true freshmen receiving significant playing time. Keeping opponents off the scoreboard is the key for Colorado, who is the only Big 12 team allowing more than 70 points per game, giving up 77.9.

Men's 5 Keys to Victory

Men need to contain Bruce

By Austin Meek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

1. DEFEND THE ARC

Baylor guard Aaron Bruce got loose against Texas Tech on Saturday, scoring 24 points in a Baylor victory. Meanwhile, Iowa State's Mike Taylor drilled 10 three-pointers in two games for the Cyclones and earned Big 12 Conference Rookie of the Week honors. K-State holds its opponents to less than 30 percent from behind the arc, but that perimeter defense will be tested this week.

2. KEEP CARTIER HOT

One thing has become clear for K-State this season: when Cartier Martin struggles, the whole team struggles as well. Against Missouri, Martin finally started to resemble the player who was named MVP of the Las Vegas Holiday Classic. Both Martin and the Wildcats will be looking to establish some consistency this week.

3. TOE THE LINE

How do you survive 24 turnovers on the road? Shoot 43 free throws and hit 37 of them. K-State followed that recipe and picked up a crucial conference victory against Missouri in Columbia. The Wildcats will look to get back to the free-throw stripe against Baylor and Iowa State this week.

4. GET THE POINT

Coach Bob Huggins said

Clent Stewart is starting to get comfortable at the point guard position, and it showed Saturday. Stewart tied a career-high with 19 points and out-dueled Missouri's Stephon Hannah. K-State needs someone to step up at the point guard position, and Stewart might be the guy.

5. CONTROL THE GLASS

K-State held a 41-17 rebounding edge in Saturday's win over Missouri. That's definitely encouraging for a team that has struggled on the glass all year. With post players Jason Bennett and Luis Colon playing limited minutes, K-State's forwards need to scratch and claw for those key rebounds, just like they did against Missouri.

Women's 5 Keys to Victory

Wildcats must improve free throws, post play to beat Baylor, Nebraska

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

1. MAINTAIN FOCUS

With two big victories in as many games against Missouri and then-No. 17 Texas A&M, K-State needs to make sure it doesn't underestimate this week's opponents in Nebraska and No. 13 Baylor.

2. STAY CONFIDENT

Putting up 81 points against Missouri was no small task. The Wildcats need to keep believing in their ability to score.

3. MAKE FOUL SHOTS

Against Texas A&M, the Wildcats shot less than 50 percent from the line. K-State ranks 10th in the Big 12 in free throw percentage at 64.2 percent. Particularly concerning is Claire Coggins' 30.8 percentage from the stripe. This problem must be fixed, or those numbers will haunt the Wildcats in the close games that might come this week.

4. DOMINATE THE POST

The Wildcats will face a pair of dominating post players in Nebraska's Kelsey Griffin and Baylor's Bernice Mosby. Griffin and Mosby rank in the Top 10 in the league in scoring and rebounding, so Marlies Gipson and Co. will have their hands full this week. However, the Wildcats should be encouraged by the way they handled Missouri center EeTisha Riddle in Saturday's 81-66 victory.

5. SCORE ON THE ROAD

The Wildcats average nearly 12 fewer points when they play away from the friendly confines of Bramlage Coliseum. This week, K-State can add a pair of quality road wins to its NCAA tournament résumé and solidify its spot in the Top 25. To do that, the Wildcats will need to bring the same intensity and focus that helped them sweep a two-game homestand against Texas A&M and Missouri.

Future players look to contribute to team

By Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many K-State basketball fans, the future can't come fast enough.

Coach Bob Huggins is doing his best this season to turn around the team he inherited from former coach Jim Wooldridge, but Huggins' stamp on the program will begin to take form next season, when he'll have his first full recruiting class.

K-State's 2007 recruiting class has already been ranked No. 1 in the nation by Rivals.com and Scout.com, thanks in large part to Huggins' ability to land arguably the best prep player in the nation, Michael Beasley. Beasley, the Notre Dame Prep School (Mass.) power forward rated No. 1 by Rivals, headlines the Wildcats' truckload of freshmen who will join the team in 2007-08. That class also includes Bill Walker, who played in six games this season before being sidelined for the remainder of the year with a ruptured anterior cruciate ligament (ACL).

Throughout this season, the Collegian will be providing readers with weekly updates on the four recruits — Beasley, Jacob Pullen, Fred Brown and Dominique Sutton — as they finish up their senior seasons with their respective high schools.

2007 RECRUITING CLASS

Beasley

Michael Beasley — 6-foot-9, 235-pound power forward
Notre Dame Prep School — Fitchburg, Mass.

In a nationally televised showdown, Beasley's Notre Dame Prep beat Dominique Sutton's The Patterson School 72-71 Sunday in the Hoop Hall Classic. Beasley had 12 points (on 5-of-12 shooting), seven rebounds and four blocks in 27 minutes.

In a tuneup game versus Mohawk Valley Community College on Friday, Beasley had 12 points, nine rebounds and five blocks in limited action, as Crusader coach Bill Barton decided to rest his star player before Sunday's key matchup.

As one of the top high school players in the country, Beasley was selected to the 2007 USA Hoop Summit Team on Monday. He and nine other players will compete April 7 in Memphis, Tenn. against World Select Team comprised of the world's top players who 19 years old or younger.

Rivals.com and the Fitchburg Sentinel & Enterprise contributed.

Brown

Fred Brown — 6-foot-3, 185-pound shooting guard
William T. Dwyer High School — West Palm Beach, Fla.

Brown scored 17 of his 29 points in the first half for Dwyer High School in a 78-66 victory over West Boca Raton on Friday.

The next day, Brown recorded a double-double with 22 points and 10 assists to lead the Panthers to an 84-81 victory against Plantation-American Heritage in the MLK Classic.

Dwyer is now 12-4 this season and ranked No. 2 in The Palm Beach Post Top 10.

The Palm Beach Post contributed.

Pullen

Jacob Pullen — 6-foot-1, 175-pound point guard Proviso East High School — Maywood, Ill.

Pullen's No. 4-ranked Pirates lost to Marshall — the No. 8 team in the Chicago area — 50-49 on Monday. The point guard had been fighting the flu all week, and his play reflected that. He went 4-of-15 from the field, and fouled out with 1:13 left in the fourth quarter. The game ended after Proviso East's Nathan Fuqua missed two free throws with 1.6 seconds left that could've tied or won the game.

Proviso East sits at 14-3 with a 5-0 record in the West Suburban Gold Conference.

The Chicago Sun-Times contributed.

Sutton

Dominique Sutton — 6-foot-4, 195-pound small forward
The Patterson School — Lenoir, N.C.

In a matchup between two of the most talented prep schools in the nation, Sutton's Patterson School lost a 72-71 nailbiter to Michael Beasley's Notre Dame Prep. Sutton did not appear in the article on Rivals.com, and phone calls to the school went unreturned. No other information is available at this time.

MLK street dedication on Friday

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

More than 20 years in the making, the dedication of 17th Street as the Martin Luther King Memorial Drive finally will happen on Friday morning.

In conjunction with the street dedication, there will be the installation of the King commemorative bust in front of Ahearn Field House.

Mayor Bruce Sneed said the street dedication - "A Street fit for a King" - will help connect the K-State community and the City of Manhattan.

"I am pleased that we will be able to dedicate the street to Martin Luther King," Sneed said. "Seventeenth is a major street in Manhattan leading into campus; it will bring positive attention to K-State and Manhattan."

The street dedication will be at 10:30 a.m. Friday in Long Park at the intersection of 17th and Yuma streets. Following the dedication ceremony, a march will progress from 17th and Colorado to the east side of Ahearn.

The commemorative bust will be installed in King's honor at noon with remarks from Kansas Board of Regents member Dan Lykins and Myra Gordon, associate provost of diversity.

The events will end with a lecture titled, "Naming Streets for Martin Luther King Jr.: A New Geography of Memory in America," by Derek Alderman, professor of geography at East Carolina University at 3:30 p.m. in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union.

The group behind it all, the City of Manhattan Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Committee, began six years ago under the leadership of Rev. James Spencer, Gordon said.

"Over time, this committee and numerous individuals from the K-State campus have been working tirelessly to make this dream a reality," Gordon said.

Most major cities have a street dedicated to King, she said.

Sneed said the dedication will help with personal, human and race relations in the city of Manhattan.

David Griffin, associate professor of secondary education and member of the memorial committee, said the renaming of the street dispels the belief that King's legacy and the celebration are only for people of color.

"Dr. King was a humanitarian. He cared about all people whether they were poor or rich, regardless of their religious beliefs or race," Griffin said.

He said the Rev. Jim Spencer, chairperson of the memorial committee and local associate pastor of Pilgrim Baptist Church, was instrumental in the renaming process.

Spencer said when he arrived in Manhattan in 1981, he talked to people to see how to dedicate a street.

"We wanted to recognize that he spoke here in 1968," Spencer said. "It is only fitting that we name the street after him."

Gordon said 17th Street ends very close to Ahearn where King gave his last university address on Jan. 19, 1968, and passes by the place where the commemorative bust will be installed.

Spencer said the city and the K-State campus have been supportive.

"Dr. King once said, 'If we don't stick together, we will fall apart,'" he said.

K-State leads Regents in deferred maintenance; SGA takes action

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Falling stones from buildings. Uneven floors. Old water lines.

These are three examples of deferred maintenance listed on the Kansas Board of Regents Web site. K-State is leading the six Regents universities in deferred maintenance with more than $254 million. In total, the universities have more than $726 million in deferred maintenance.

In her 2007 State of the State Address on Jan. 10, Gov. Kathleen Sebelius committed to university deferred maintenance as a top priority in fiscal year 2008. At the end of the month, Sebelius plans to announce a multi-year plan for deferred maintenance.

Deferred maintenance is "to put off to a future time care or upkeep," according to the Kansas Board of Regents Web site. Deferred maintenance also is separated into two cost categories - building renewal costs and utility/infrastructure costs.

To maintain an appropriate budget allocation for routine maintenance and capital renewal, about 2 to 4 percent of the current replacement value should be allocated to a university each fiscal year, according to the Regents' fall 2006 deferred and annual maintenance report.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, said K-State should receive at least $28 million each fiscal year based on its current replacement value. Since 1974, K-State has received about $50 million from the Regents as appropriations for rehabilitation and repair, he said.

Rawson said there are several reasons why K-State has the highest amount of deferred maintenance of the Regents universities. Sixty percent of the Regents buildings that are more than 100 years old are in use at K-State, Rawson said. On average, K-State's buildings also are more complex since it is a research university, he said.

To gain state legislators' attention about deferred maintenance, Student Governing Association members at K-State and other Regents universities organized a postcard campaign in December, student body president Lucas Maddy said. About 1,200 K-State students signed postcards.

"It was not very well organized, but we were on par with what everyone else had, so we were proud about that," said Maddy, senior in agricultural technology management.

In November, Regents universities' student body presidents also decided to form a Facebook.com group, "Kansas Deferred Maintenance Campaign," Maddy said.

"In the notoriety of having a Facebook group, we've been effective in gaining attention for it," Maddy said. "We showed legislators that this is the way students voice their opinions today, and they mentioned it as much as they did the postcard campaign. I think they really gained an understanding for how students raise awareness now."

Clint Blaes, senior in agricultural communications and journalism, is one of more than 1,200 students in the Facebook group.

"I think the purpose is to raise awareness, because we know that everyone looks at Facebook," said Blaes, who also is a College of Agriculture senator. "If it makes someone wonder what it is and click on it, I think it raises awareness on the issue and gets people talking about it."

After Sebelius' announcement of a comprehensive plan regarding deferred maintenance, Maddy said SGA does not plan to take further action.

"We've gone as far as we can, and everything I've heard has been very encouraging," he said. "We've done our part as far as the groundwork goes. We can't write her budget for her, and we can't pass the legislation."

University of Kansas students also took action in contacting legislators in December, said Ian Staples, KU legislative director and senior in political science.

Staples said KU's SGA members met with large lecture classrooms to pass out postcards, and they hand-delivered them to Sebelius' office.

Alpha Phi Alpha to honor King with monument

By Andrew LeValley
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Martin Luther King Jr. Observation Week did not go unnoticed by the men of Alpha Phi Alpha. King was a prominent member of Alpha Phi Alpha, and the fraternity is honoring him in several ways.

Each year, the fraternity holds a candlelight vigil for King. This year, the fraternity is bringing in special guest speaker Keith Beauchamp to talk about his documentary, "The Untold Story of Emmett Louis Till."

"The story of Emmett Till helped to spark the civil rights movement, so Keith Beauchamp is significant to our week of honoring Dr. Martin Luther King," said Bryon Williams, junior in economics and member of Alpha Phi Alpha.

Beauchamp spent 10 years producing the film; he will show his documentary at 7:30 p.m. and deliver a speech about the film and the civil rights movement in the K-State Alumni Center Ballroom. The candlelight vigil immediately will follow.

Alpha Phi Alpha also will take part in the memorial march at 10:30 a.m. in Long Park, ending at Ahearn Field House.

Nationally, the fraternity has spearheaded a campaign to build a monument in Washington, D.C. to Officials plan visitors center

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City of Manhattan is exploring the possibility of a visitors center on Interstate 70, which would provide information on all the region has to offer, said Lyle Butler, president of the Manhattan Area Chamber of Commerce.

The center also would provide fuel, refreshments and restrooms.

"We would want this center to provide knowledge about everything in the area, in all directions," Butler said. "From Kansas State University, the Flint Hills, the Konza Prairie, Fort Riley, Topeka, down to Council Grove and even all the way out to Abilene."

However, Butler noted it has been in the works for quite some time.

Butler said the idea of a visitors center began to take shape in 1994, when DPRA, a research and consulting company, conducted a study to determine whether it was necessary.

Don Wissman, then chairman of DPRA, said the research consisted of a six-month, two-phase analysis.

"We first spent time examining other visitors centers and seeing what worked and what didn't," he said. "Among other things, we also observed traffic patterns and took traffic counts. In doing so, we realized that the potential was there for a visitors center in the region."

The second phase of the analysis determined the best location for the center. After considering a dozen other locations, DPRA chose a place

Test your knowledge of trivia, entertainment and yourself

Are you environmentally friendly?

1. Have you ever thought of eating organically grown vegetables?

a. Yes, that's all I'll eat.
b. No, why would I spend $3 for a head of lettuce when I can get it "non-organic" for 86 cents?

2. Do you realize that instead of driving your car to classes or work, you can ride a bike or walk and save money and gas?

a. Yes, I do that sometimes.
b. No, I can barely make it from one building to the next, much less all the way from home to campus.

3. Do you try to minimize use of aerosol products, which can harm the ozone layer?

a. Yes, I stay away from Aqua Net.
b. No, I always spray air freshener after I use the bathroom.

4. Do you try to use products that can be recycled?

a. Yes, paper bags all the way when I visit the grocery store.
b. No, never thought of it. Styrofoam cups are better than paper.

5. Have you ever donated or helped organizations that work to protect the environment?

a. Yes, every weekend of my life.
b. No, I don't like the pay rate for volunteering.

6. Do you try to reduce use of electricity when you can?

a. Yes, when I leave any room I'm in, I try to turn off the lights.
b. No, why turn off the light when I'm just coming back ... eventually?

7. Do you litter?

a. No, never. It could affect the environment.
b. Yes, I happen to like the way beer bottles look on my front lawn.

DCE offers variety of dance classes for 1 credit hour

Amanda Galyardt, senior in psychology, and Brett Bartholomew, junior in kinesiology, dance together Wednesday evening at the Ecumenical Campus Ministry Auditorium. Several types of dance classes are available.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They twirled, spun and even tossed their partners into the air.

Students mastered a number of steps Wednesday during one of several dance classes offered by the Division of Continuing Education at K-State for one credit hour.

The classes available include ballroom dance, swing and salsa dance, and beginning Middle Eastern dance, also known as belly dance.

Ballroom dance classes started Wednesday and are offered at 8 and 9 p.m. in the Ecumenical Campus Ministry Auditorium, 1021 Denison Ave. Mike Bennett, who has taught ballroom dancing in Manhattan since 1987 instructs the class.

Bennett and his dance partner,

Becky Schippers, have taught for DCE for six years. Schippers, who is pursuing a master's degree in statistics at K-State, has been dancing for 17 years.

"It's fun," Bennett said. "The dance classes are enjoyable, physical and social. It's a party."

Bryce Miller, sophomore in information systems, and Jessi Shivers, freshman in open option, said they took ballroom dancing last semester.

"They make it easy if you are serious about learning the steps," Miller said.

Shivers said she also enjoyed the classes.

"It is a good way to meet new people," Shivers said.

Both men and women are welcome to sign up as doubles or singles.

"The ratio of girls to guys in each class is pretty equal," Bennett said.

The swing and salsa dance classes are more advanced and are available to students who already have taken ballroom dance. The classes start at 7 p.m. on Jan. 17 in the ECM Auditorium.

The beginning Middle Eastern dance class is taught by Lisa Zecha, administrative assistant for the physics department at K-State. Zecha also is the assistant director of the Maya Zahira School of Belly Dance.

This class will focus on the beginning techniques of modern belly dancing. It is open to men and women, and classes begin at 6 p.m. on Feb. 1 in Ahearn Field House 301.

Zecha said she strives to provide a place for people to come learn not only about belly dance but also about themselves.

Students can register for classes online at www.dce.ksu.edu/dce/outreach/recreationcourses.

Local band enters Hall of Fame

By Austin Apple
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A local rock-'n'-roll band joined a select group of local music movers and shakers this weekend.

The Kansas Music Hall of Fame inducted The Common Few?, a band from the late 1960s Saturday.

Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president and director of the Division of Human Resources, said The Common Few? began playing in 1964 and continued through 1971.

Leitnaker was the band's bass player and vocalist.

They played a lot of soul music during the early years, mostly in Kansas, Nebraska and Oklahoma, he said.

According to www.thecommonfew.com, Leitnaker got his start in music when he learned how to play the piano at the age of 8. Leitnaker got his first guitar when he was in seventh grade.

Leitnaker then switched to bass and bought a Gibson EB-3, according to the site.

Leitnaker took over lead vocals and bass for The Common Few? during the winter of 1969, while he was a freshman at Emporia State University.

According to the site, The Common Few? split up in August 1971.

Leitnaker graduated from Emporia State, and continued to play after the band broke up.

In 1994, he began working at K-State.

Along with the Common Few?, the Kansas Music Hall of Fame inducted Dawayne Bailey, the Blue Riddim Band, Marilyn Maye, Martina McBride, The Rising Suns, (Fabulous) Silvertones and Tide last Saturday, according to the Kansas Music Hall of Fame Web site.

The Common Few? performed at the induction ceremony and received induction plaques, Leitnaker said.

The Silvertones, The Rising Suns, and the Blue Riddim Band and Tide also performed.

"I'm as proud as I can be," said Jenny Merrick, Leitnaker's daughter.

Merrick said it was amazing to see what her dad had accomplished.

Bill Lee, president of the Kansas Music Hall of Fame, said it was no surprise the band was selected for induction.

"The Common Few? have had a couple reunions over the past few years that exposed them to a new audience, while reminding their old fans of how good they were in the old days," he said.

According to the Kansas Music Hall of Fame Web site, the Hall of Fame board of directors has a vote a vote is held each October to select its inductees.

"One of the earlier reunions of the band came at a benefit concert in January 2006 which was well attended by Hall of Fame members and earlier inductees, the two groups that get to vote on inductees," Lee said.

The band made a good impression, he said.

"Paying members of the Hall of Fame and those acts earlier inducted get to vote for up to 10 acts on the ballot," Lee said.

The 10 inductees on the ballot included five write-in votes, Lee said, one being Leitnaker's band.

"The Common Few? became the first write-in act to be inducted," Lee said.

Engineering student receives award for multiculturalism

By Kendra Stiles
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Leadership is a way of life for Abdulrasak Toyin Yahaya.

Yahaya, senior in civil engineering, received K-State's Commerce Bank Presidential Student Award for Distinguished Services in Enhancing Multiculturalism. He accepted the award Tuesday in the K-State Student Union.

"This award means a lot to me because some of my mentors have won it," Yahaya said. "Enhancing multiculturalism is something that is very necessary here at K-State, and I'm happy to be a part of something so important."

Keener Tippin, adviser to the Black Student Union and research news coordinator for K-State Media Relations and Marketing nominated Yahaya for the award.

"He's the definition of the word 'leader,'" Tippin said. "He's just a leader. He has that quality."

Yahaya is serving his second term as chair for the Big 12 Council on Black Student Government and is being recognized for his work toward diversity enhancement.

"Just being elected as the chair once is an honor, so to be elected twice by your peers is really something," Tippin said. "And he was elected unanimously."

Yahaya is pursuing a minor in leadership studies. He also is involved in the Black Student Union, the National Society of Black Engineers, the First Tee Academy, Multicultural Ambassadors and the National Society of Collegiate Scholars. In addition, he serves as president for the Kappa Tau chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity.

Tippin said Yahaya brings valuable qualities to all of the organizations he is involved in.

"He has a lot of energy and a lot of vision," Tippin said. "He's just hardworking. Last year, he developed a fundraiser for victims of hurricane Katrina for the whole Big 12 Council on Black Student Government."

In high school, Yahaya began to cultivate his leadership skills by participating in team sports and serving as the vice president for the multicultural enrichment team.

"I have the ability to listen to other people and understand their needs when they need help," Yahaya said.

Yahaya said he models his leadership style after those who inspired him to be a leader.

"I look up to Keener Tippin, who nominated me for this award," he said. "He's the adviser to the Black Student Union, and his leadership style is leading by being behind the scenes."

"I like to try and take the leadership role of serving others without trying to take all the credit."

Tippin said no other person was better suited to receive the award than Yahaya.

"He has great vision," Tippin said. "He just sees the whole picture and everything. He doesn't have tunnel vision. He looks at every point of view and he makes a decision from there."

TO THE POINT Maintenance backlog will hurt more in the end

Like most people who do not commute to work in private planes, we consider any amount of money that ends in "million" to qualify as lots.

When faced with the fact that repairing K-State's maintenance backlog will cost more than $250 million, the editorial staff is ready to concede that the sum easily enters the territory of "phat loot."

However we realize that portions of our university are approaching the geriatric mark, and the price of not maintaining is going to get awfully steep as conditions deteriorate.

A building's average age at K-State is 56 years old, the highest of all Regents universities in the state, and our $250 million chunk almost is one-third of the entire renewal cost for the entire state.

Leaky roofs, rotting floors and rusting support beams can only accept so many Duct Tape and panty hose solutions, and many buildings are approaching science-fiction levels of rundown.

We realize these are not on-the-cheap repair jobs, but we can only assume that if left unattended there will be other costs as K-State dissolves beneath our feet — the social costs of having a brick fall on your head, for instance, are enormous.

Spending money now to fix the problem rather than patch it later on is the only solution left.

Barring that, we only can wait until our university comes crashing down — a million pieces of Duct Tape crying out in terror and then ... silence.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Tactics to fight procrastination unnecessary, sit-down approach only way

Set the Collegian aside — you can read this later.

You can read it after you've spent several lectures trying to finish the Sudoku and crossword. Or you can read it at 2 a.m. when you don't want to finish the last 10 pages of tomorrow's reading assignment.

'Tis the season for a brand-new semester. Eighteen more weeks to put off important tasks so you can scan Facebook, MySpace and YouTube for hours on end. Ninety more school days of making daily to-do lists, only to check off one or two items — if you're lucky.

One word exists that unites all of us teen-to-20-somethings in college regardless of grade point average, academic major or gender: procrastination.

For example, I bet you have at least three more important things to do right now than read this column.

You are not alone. More than 25 percent of Americans say they procrastinate, and more than half of them are men, according to University of Calgary professor Piers Steel's 30-page study on procrastination published in January's "Psychological Bulletin." (An ironic side note: Steel's 10-year study was only supposed to take five years, he admitted in a CNN report).

ADRIANNE
DEWEESE

Steel found technology (shock) as a huge contributor to modern procrastination. "It's never been harder to be self-disciplined in all of history than it is now," he said in a CNN report.

Oh, the excuses. Technology should not serve as an excuse for procrastinating any more than reading the newspaper should.

Take heart, though. There is a difference between procrastination and laziness. The American Heritage College Dictionary defines procrastination as "to postpone or delay needlessly," while laziness is defined as being "resistant to work or exertion." Procrastination is the result of performing other tasks when other work should have priority; being lazy is just sitting on your rump without even the strain of thinking about work.

We could have all-day seminars discussing strategies to combat our humanistic need to delay tasks until they are completed in 30 seconds or less. Talking about procrastination for eight hours won't make it go away; it would only add to it. In fact, having such a cure-all seminar or lecture is procrastination in itself (see definitions above for clarification).

Steel goes on in his study to say that although procrastination can be reduced, it cannot be fully eliminated. It's here to stay, and there's nothing we can do about it. True, perhaps, but thank you, Nike, for combining three simple words together that serve as a mantra for procrastination: Just do it.

I write to-do lists everyday. I have lists of lists needing to be written. Steel even published a bulleted-list with his study of ways to fight procrastination.

The one thing I have learned through my habitual list-making is that writing tasks down does not make them any easier to accomplish. It does not lessen the workload in any fashion. In fact, making lists is only a contribution to the p-word.

Don't pour fuel on the fire with novel-length lists. Pick a task, and just do it. Repeat until all tasks are complete or the day ends, whichever comes first.

Okay, you're done reading this column. Now get back to work.

Former security adviser jeopardized country

Remember the Watergate scandal?

Then-President Nixon was forced into resignation when his "plumbers" planted listening devices in the hotel where the Democratic National Committee was stationed. Had he not resigned, he probably would have been impeached.

Nixon was deemed a crook, accused of trying to steal information for his own gain. Can you imagine what would happen if a politician today stole documents for his own gain?

Actually, you don't need to try too hard.

Sandy Berger, former National Security Adviser for President Clinton, stole a document called "Millennium after Action Review" four years ago. This document warned the Clinton administration about Al-Qaeda's plans to attack the United States. It was never passed on to the Bush administration.

Apparently worried about being caught, Berger left this document — among others — at a construction site. Berger's sneaky tactics didn't help, as he was detected and arrested for theft of confidential materials.

How many of you heard about this? I imagine if you pay attention to the news you probably have an idea of the Berger scandal, but this crime made nowhere near the headlines that Watergate did. Berger received a $50,000 fine, 100 hours of community service and has been banned from accessing confidential materials for a whopping three years, but he received no prison sentence. In other words, Berger was slapped on the wrist.

Perhaps you think that Berger's crime should not be compared to Watergate, and to be honest, you might be correct. Berger's crime was far more jeopardizing to this country's national security.

When reviewing classified documents, Berger did not do it in the proper fashion, meaning he did not review the documents in a secure facility and under supervision. Because of this, the law enforcement should have been notified immediately. But the sad fact of the matter is the law never was contacted. Due to this security debacle, Rep. Tom

Davis of Virginia said the "compromised law enforcement effort contributes to reduced confidence that the 9/11 commission received all the documents requested."

Why would Berger be interested in withholding documents that could be detrimental for the 9/11 commission? Well, just as the "Millennium after Action Review," other documents exposed that the Clinton administration had every chance to nab bin Laden, yet never took action. Berger went to great lengths to get rid of documents that might cause him inconvenience. Also, Berger laid a great deal of inconvenience on the country.

A little more than a week ago, a House committee released a 61-page report detailing Berger's crimes. In it the committee stated, "The full extent of Berger's document removal... is not known, and never can be known."

The size of this crime never will be definite. Berger reviewed documents before he was questioned by the 9/11 commission, and during these visits he slipped away undetected with documents tucked neatly in his pants. Nobody knows how often he did this. We only know what he pleaded guilty to, and that was stealing 9/11 commission documents.

Nixon had his men plant listening devices in a hotel. Berger stole classified documents that placed national security in harm's way. Nixon was forced to resign from his presidency, forever being tainted as a crook. Berger has a fine to pay and some trash to pick up.

By helping himself, Berger helped enemies of this country. Many accuse our president for sending young men and women to their deaths across seas. Yet, those same accusers do not have much to say about Berger and his deliberate carelessness for this country's safety.

Overcoming society's stereotypes necessary to realize King's dream

By Daniel Burroughs
INDEPENDENT FLORIDA ALLIGATOR

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Having just enjoyed the Martin Luther King Jr. Day weekend, I thought it might be worthwhile to reflect upon race as I've experienced it.

Here at UF, it's been pretty cool to see a situation in which racial relations are at a high point. Coming from a 99.9-percent black high school, I didn't know what to expect in a mostly white college. I haven't been disappointed.

From what I've experienced — and admittedly, that could be skewed — UF is one of the most racially open places where I've ever lived.

It seems to me that, among some students here, there are preconceptions about race. But I haven't seen hostility.

I could be overly optimistic. Perhaps I'm totally wrong — I haven't even been here a whole year yet.

Still, most UF students I've met are willing to see a person for who he or she is. Pretty much everyone here has approached me as a person, not a minority or a skin color.

But what I have noticed is that too many people believe stereotypes in this town. It must be addressed.

Sure, there are the stereotypes everyone must deal with. For instance, at one point, a few of my hallmates assumed my favorite music genre was rap.

Actually, it's electronica.

In another case, some of my fraternity brothers assumed I was a Democrat.

I'm a Libertarian.

Nobody expected that from a black guy, which is the problem. Too often, people judge a person's character solely on appearance. But contrary to popular belief, cultural and racial background says very little about a person.

Now, I'm not crazy enough to believe that UF is totally devoid of those who are prejudiced and ignorant. But it seems to me like they're pretty small in number, which I think is a testament to our generation.

I think we're finally growing out of some of the age-old racist stupidity that our forefathers fed us, but we still have a long way to go. The idea of a black guy who likes bluegrass, an Asian who's terrible at math or a non-Catholic Latino sometimes surprises people. It shouldn't.

Stereotypes are detrimental because they cause us to view someone as a concept or thing instead of a person. And stereotypes don't necessarily have to be racial.

Do you know Jessica Adams?

Of course not.

But what if I said she was a cheerleading sorority girl from Orange County, Calif.?

What if I said Joe Carter was a football player from inner-city New York? Many people out there would think they knew volumes about both of these imaginary people without once having met them.

Of course, they'd be dead wrong.

Clearly, it's impossible to live life without making assumptions about people and things. For instance, if you come from small-town Georgia, I'm going to assume that you're a conservative Georgia fan and can define "hoeecake."

There's nothing particularly wrong with that. However, I'd be crossing the line when upon meeting people, I don't allow myself to see them for whom they really are.

All prejudice in the world is nothing more than a failure of perception. So let's open our minds to people and change our perceptions about them.

Do that, and the day Dr. King was waiting for will be right around the corner.

Distance education division adds programs, opportunities

By Ben Hedges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Division of Continuing Education is offering more opportunities for students seeking a degree or certification with three new programs for the spring 2007 semester.

The university now offers a bachelor's degree in elementary education for students in southwest Kansas and graduate certificate programs in applied statistics and public administration.

Through DCE, students in Kansas and across the country can take courses through various online and recorded media.

With the continually growing amount of programs, students can pursue a degree or simply gain college credit without having to relocate away from their jobs or family.

David Stewart, assistant dean of program development and marketing for DCE, said distance education has expanded greatly in the past decade.

"I remember when I came here in 1996, and we put the first two K-State courses online," Stewart said. "Today, we have over 300 courses that are offered online."

New programs commonly are offered in distance education with growing productivity and technology, and new degrees, certificates and classes are offered on a yearly basis.

"Our primary focus is how can we meet the educational needs of the people," Stewart said.

Proposals for new degrees and programs come from a combination of market research, departmental feedback and cooperation with partners outside of the university. The DCE focuses on the needs of students and matches them with how K-State can appropriately provide for those needs. Stewart said trying to create as many programs as possible is not a wise decision.

"What we should do is play to the strengths of the university," Stewart said.

K-State offers 16 master's degrees, seven bachelor's degrees and 16 certificate programs through distance education.

Joseph Aistrup, department head for political science, said the new 15-credit-hour public administration certificate program is beneficial to his department.

"It enables us to deliver our program to a broader array of students," Aistrup said.

Aistrup said the challenge of distance education comes in keeping students caught up, but he assures it is no more difficult than keeping a classroom of students on track.

There were plans to release a master's degree in counseling and student development, but Stewart said it still needs more time for approval by the Kansas Board of Regents. He expects the program will be available in the near future.

"If all the classes are not already available online, we are very close," Stewart said.

"So that's going to be a program, and we will release it just as soon as we get approval from the Board of Regents."

SUICIDE CAR BOMB IN SHIITE SLUM KILLS 17

BAGHDAD, Iraq — A suicide car bomber killed 17 Shiites in a teeming Sadr City market Wednesday while gunmen in a predominantly Sunni neighborhood shot a convoy of democracy workers, taking the lives of an American woman and three bodyguards.

The attack came one day after car bombings killed scores of university students just two miles away, indicating that al-Qaida-linked fighters are bent on a surge of bloodshed as U.S. and Iraqi forces gear up for a fresh neighborhood-by-neighborhood security sweep.

Although nobody claimed responsibility for either day's car bombings, such attacks are the hallmark of Sunni militants, who appear to be taking advantage of a waiting period before the security crackdown to step up attacks on Shiites.

Two others were wounded, said Les Campbell, Middle East director of the Washington-based National Democratic Institute. Names were withheld until families could be notified.

'DOOMSDAY CLOCK' MOVED CLOSER TO 12

LONDON — The world is nudging closer to nuclear or environmental apocalypse, a group of prominent scientists warned Wednesday as it pushed the hand of its symbolic Doomsday Clock closer to midnight.

The clock, which was set two minutes forward to 11:55, represents the likelihood of a global cataclysm.

It was the fourth time since the Soviet collapse in 1991 the clock ticked forward amid fears of "a second nuclear age" prompted by standoffs with Iran and North Korea. Warnings of climate change also played a role.

The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, which sets the clock, was founded in 1945 as a newsletter distributed among nuclear physicists concerned about nuclear war, and midnight originally symbolized a widespread nuclear conflict. The bulletin has grown into an organization focused more generally on manmade threats to human civilization.

honor King.

The K-State chapter is doing its part to raise money for the monument. "One More for the King" is a program that is established to allow students to contribute to the monument.

"If every student donates one dollar to 'One More for the King,' we can raise over $20,000," Williams said.

Alpha Phi Alpha plans on setting a table in the Union from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. where students can make contributions.

Abdul Yahaya, senior in civil engineering and active president of Alpha Phi Alpha at K-State said there are several reasons why the fraternity honored King.

"There is the obvious reason that he was a member of Alpha Phi Alpha, but more than that, he means so much to America."

The events the fraternity planned to honor King are all community based, Williams said.

"Dr. King was about bettering all of mankind, not just African-Americans," he said. "We've tried to include the Manhattan community as well as fellow students in honoring King because working together is what he preached."

near the interchange of I-70 and Kansas Highway 177, nine miles south of Manhattan. The property sits at the corner of the exchange and is the site of an abandoned gas station.

"We really liked the centralized location," Wissman said. "There was a lot to promote in all directions. The location also served as a gateway to the Flint Hills, and it provided a good, elevated view of the scenery."

After a few years of dormancy, property near the I-70 and K-177 exchange became available and sparked the revival of the visitors center project. The chamber now has a temporary lease agreement on seven acres of land until June.

"It's not a done deal yet," Butler said.

"We've just secured the land. We are going to explore a lot in the next six months while the option still exists. We really need to look at the design and structure of the facilities and also funding."

Butler also noted that, over the next six months, the chamber will communicate with the Kansas Department of Commerce, the state of Kansas, Geary County, K-State and other organizations to discuss the center's future.

"We want to make sure it's the kind of visitors center that everyone would want," Butler said. "This center could provide many opportunities for the region, and we want everyone to benefit from that."

Surprise of the game

Kevin Rogers' quiet performance

Kevin Rogers, who had been averaging nearly 17 points and 10 rebounds in Big 12 play, was a non-factor due to his early foul trouble. Rogers picked up his third foul with 9:03 left in the first half after taking zero shots. The fouls didn't subside in the second, as Rogers fouled out with 3:15 left and finished the game with two points on only two shot attempts. Baylor missed his inside scoring the whole game and had to rely on outside shooting from guards Aaron Bruce and Henry Dugat.

Turning point

Martin's 3-pointer to put the Wildcats up for good

With 5:11 remaining in the second half, senior Cartier Martin received a pass from senior Lance Harris at the top of the key and drained a 3-pointer to give the Wildcats a 59-58 lead they never relinquished. The shot ignited the 8,850 fans at Bramlage Coliseum and forced Baylor coach Scott Drew to call a timeout to slow the momentum.

After scoring only one point in the first 9:45, K-State exploded - hitting eight of its last 11 shots to finish the game and converted 11-of-14 free throws. The end result: twenty-nine points in the final 10 minutes to turn an 11-point deficit into a nine-point Big 12 victory.

Game MVP

After struggling through the first half, Hoskins finished with 13 points and seven rebounds, all of them coming in the second period. The junior forward single-handedly brought K-State out of its second-half funk by scoring six straight points to cut Baylor's lead to 51-46 with 8:56 remaining. Hoskins has now scored double figures in 11 straight games. In the first half, Hoskins played only eight minutes and was held scoreless.

ANALYSIS

Martin's shot comes through in crunch time

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Behind closed doors, senior Cartier Martin has been working tirelessly on his jump shot.

He has been trying to get his shot back to where it was a year ago, when he led K-State with 18 points per game and made 47 percent of his attempts.

"Last year when I was shooting well, I noticed the left hand wasn't on the ball," Martin said before K-State's 69-60 win over Baylor Wednesday night.

"The left hand just kind of got on the ball earlier this year, so I went back to moving the left hand to where it is now, and it's dramatically changed my shot.

"I've got to have the left hand more to the side. That allows me to get a better follow-through with my right hand."

Coach Bob Huggins said at a recent press conference that he also noticed Martin's left hand was getting too far in front of his shot.

On the surface, shooting a basketball doesn't seem to be all that complex, but as anybody who has played competitively can attest, it's difficult.

An athlete must be able to repeat the same shot over and over again, making sure the fundamentals are all in place and the release is where it needs to be. Martin said he sees noticeable differences in his shot when he analyzes game tape.

"There's a big difference (in mechanics) on whether or not I make or miss," Martin said. "When I make a shot, I jump up, and I'm straight up and down. When I miss, I fade back, or I fade out of the shot. My percentage goes down."

That's certainly been the case this year, particularly in Martin's last four games. Martin had been in a 10-of-35 shooting slump, averaging just 8.75 points per game during that stretch - much lower than his season average of 14.2 points per game.

After shooting 6-of-9 for 15 points against Baylor, Martin appeared to have control of his shot.

"I trust my shot every time," Martin said. "Sometimes it doesn't go in for you. But when I shoot the ball, I'm confident I'll make the shot."

His first and only shot attempt of the second half was no exception. With the Wildcats trailing 58-56, Martin took a pass at the top of the key from senior Lance Harris and laced a critical 3-pointer to put the Wildcats ahead for good.

Earlier in the week, Martin emphasized the importance of hitting big shots for his team when it is most needed.

"Down the stretch, I need to be as clutch as I can be," he said.

He was clutch against Baylor, and without his make - which swung momentum and brought the 8,850 fans at Bramlage Coliseum to their feet - K-State might be sitting at 1-3 in the Big 12 Conference rather than 2-2.

Big comeback

K-State senior Cartier Martin drives to the basket for two of his 15 points during K-State's come-from-behind win over Baylor 69-60. During the second half, Martin scored his 1,200th career point as a Wildcat.

Hoskins scoreless in first half against Baylor, closes gap in second half

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The way David Hoskins played the first half, K-State fans might have forgotten he was there.

The undersized forward was held scoreless in eight minutes of play in the opening half of K-State's 69-60 win over Baylor Wednesday in Bramlage Coliseum.

Hoskins waited until late in the game to make his presence felt. He scored his first points off a layup with 10:14 left in the game.

"(Dave's) a little under the weather," coach Bob Huggins said. "I told him, 'I grew up with folks who were mailmen in Cleveland. They get 12 inches of snow, nobody really cares if they got the sniffles. You've still got to deliver the mail.' Dave's got to deliver the mail.

He's got to come to play everyday."

Hoskins' basket cut Baylor's lead to 51-42 and was the Wildcats' first field goal of the second half. Up to that point, the Bears were on a 12-0 run that stretched all the way back to a Luis Colon free throw made in the opening minutes of the second half.

Huggins said his players were a little confused about their defensive assignments.

"I think they thought for a minute there that we were playing a triangle and two because for the first few possessions we had three guys playing zone and two playing man," Huggins said. "Once we got everyone on the same page I thought we did pretty good."

Hoskins followed his first make of the game with a pair of trips to the foul line. He finished with 13 points and seven rebounds.

After Hoskins finally got the team going, the Wildcats went on 29-9 run to close out the final 10 minutes.

"They went on a run, and we knew we had to get out," senior Cartier Martin said. "We knew we just had to put the ball in the hole, get our offense going, and try to get to the free-throw line."

As usual, Hoskins scored the bulk of his points from the foul line. He offset a 2-of-12 night from the field by sinking 9-of-10 free throws.

Senior Lance Harris, who finished with 18 points, led the Wildcats in scoring. Martin and junior Clint Stewart scored 15 and 12 respectively.

Sophomore Henry Dugat led the Bears in scoring with 15 points. Baylor junior Aaron Bruce added 13 points but needed 17 shots (2-of-12 from 3-point range) to do so.

Sophomore Kevin Rogers - who entered the game as the Bears' leading scorer - played only 12 minutes and scored two points. Rogers got into early foul trouble and eventually fouled out of the game.

The 11 point deficit was the largest they have overcome since they came back from 11 to beat William & Mary 70-60 Nov. 11.

"I was really happy for the guys because they need that," Huggins said. "They need to understand that if you keep doing the right things then you got a chance."

Cats outscore Nebraska in second half, still fall short

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

FILE PHOTO

Despite a furious second-half comeback, which saw the K-State women's basketball team outscore Nebraska 42-25, the Wildcats still lost 70-63 Wednesday at Lincoln, Neb.

The Wildcats, nationally ranked for the first time since the conclusion of the 2004-05 season, entered the game with a two-game winning streak but were without the services of forward Marlies Gipson.

Both teams came out firing on all cylinders, making the first six shots attempted, including 3-pointers from Nebraska's Jelena Spiric and K-State's Shalee Lehning and Shana Wheeler.

The Wildcats cooled quickly, however and found themselves trailing 23-12 with 10:10 left in the first half.

Things only got worse for K-State as the Wildcats' lack of inside presence was exploited repeatedly by Husker forwards Kelsey Griffin and Chelsea Aubry, who combined for 17 points on 7-of-8 shooting in the opening 12 minutes.

From there, Nebraska's Kiera Hardy took over, closing out the half with 11 points in the final six minutes.

At halftime, Nebraska, which did not commit a foul in the game's first 19:43, led the Wildcats 43-21.

The second half began considerably better for the Wildcats as junior forward Shana Wheeler picked Hardy's pocket and fed senior Claire Coggins, who hit an open 3-pointer. Seconds later Wheeler made a jumper of her own, closing the gap to 47-26.

Then the floodgates opened as the Wildcats' defensive pressure forced Nebraska to commit a string of turnovers that led to a 16-0 K-State run.

By the time the 13:31 mark rolled around the Wildcats had cut a 24-point halftime lead to seven.

K-State guard Kimberly Dietz led the charge with eight points in the first six minutes of the second half but fouled out with 9:59 left in the half.

Despite Dietz's absence, the Cats battled on and reduced the Husker lead to six points by the 7:32 mark.

Freshman forward Ashley Sweat made a 3-pointer, then knocked the ball loose to Coggins. Sweat slashed through the lane and banked home a layup that narrowed the gap to three.

Unfortunately for K-State, Nebraska finally regained its composure and, following a 7-0 run, was able to reassert a double-digit lead.

Despite an inspired second-half effort, the 24-point halftime deficit proved too much for the Wildcat women to overcome.

Weary Boys blend roots, rock and alternative country with Jumpin' Jolie

"Jumpin' Jolie"

Album review by Eric Brown

For those who have given ear time to the Weary Boys' newest album, "Jumpin' Jolie," you've likely learned the Weary Boys are anything but.

Contrary to its band-name adjective, this Texas quintet's fifth album is a strong, enduring, vigorous and fresh fusion of blues, bluegrass, rockabilly, vintage rock, Cajun and country that'll make you hoot and holler. It will leave visions of smoke-filled bars in your mind and the taste of liquor in the back of your throat long after the music is over.

The first track and title song, "Jumpin' Jolie," is the perfect introduction to the rest of the 12 ramble-tamble, rock tunes on the album. The song is simple in lyrics and chord structure but adds more with its energy and rhythm.

The next track, "Lost Bayou Ramble," is a lyric-less jamboree, which features Brian Salvi's fierce fiddling, while the third song, "Drink On It," temporarily slows the tempo of the album and centers around Mario Matteoli's tender-hearted lyrics and Darren Hoff's gentle guitar work.

Other highlights of the album include the rollin'-down-the-tracks rhythm and blues tune, "You're the One I Care For" and "Bet My Life (on the Losin' Side)," which is written by Matteoli and beautifully sung by guest vocalist Jen Duke. The band's covers of "Vaya Con Dios" and "Jambalaya," along with the rest of the album, are also worth a second listen.

And luckily for Manhattan's lo-

"I really enjoyed them last time they were here, and so did everyone else."

"They're a great alt-country band that brings a good time to their live shows."

The Weary Boys travel to Manhattan from the proclaimed "live music capital of the world," Austin, Texas, where they have established themselves as a music mainstay among the numerous aspiring musicians that arrive in the capital city on a daily basis.

Since 2000, when Matteoli, Hoff and Salvi moved to Austin from northern California and joined forces with bassist Darren Sluyter and drummer Cary Ozanian, the Weary Boys have climbed the city's music totem pole.

The band started showcasing its talents on the street corners of Sixth Street, but now they are headlining their shows, performing at festivals and opening for greats like Willie Nelson.

"There's been a lot of changes in the last six years, but one thing that's stayed the same is that we're traveling around the country together playing grass roots rock and country music," Salvi said. "We would like to eventually play to a bigger audience, but until then, we'll just keep plugging away at what we've been doing."

cal music connoisseurs, the Weary Boys' live shows are rumored to be just as vibrant and bombastic, if not more so, than its albums. The Boys will be performing at Auntie Mae's Parlor tonight, playing their second show in the basement.

"The crowd should anticipate a good show from these guys," said Jeff Denney, owner of Auntie Mae's.

Amaretto Sours at O'Malley's

Bartender Jared Eatinger (pictured below), junior in construction science, pours an Amaretto Sour at O'Malley's Alley. Eatinger, 24, said he enjoys his job, which he has had for about two months.

Before he began bartending, he worked as a bouncer. Eatinger said he enjoys bartending more because he is constantly moving and interacts more with the patrons.

"I get to be a little more friendly," he said.

Though the signature drink at O'Malley's is a Belfast Bomber, Eatinger said Amaretto Sours are easy and inexpensive to make at home.

O'Malley's recipe for an Amaretto Sour

- 1 shot Amaretto
- A splash of orange juice
- Fill the rest of a small glass with sour mix.

MTV reality shows a guilty pleasure

As a young child, I was fascinated with the pictures on the big and small screens. Rushing home after school with my older sister, I usually dove into an episode of "Full House" or "Step by Step." As I grew up, I became more and more involved with entertainment and especially films.

I loved the feeling of being able to escape into a world other than my own for a couple of hours and experience things with different characters.

Now as I enter my last semester of college, I started to think about what I want for my future. Hopefully one day I can be a successful reviewer of television and/or film.

For now, I will relay my thoughts to you who read The Edge page.

As February sweeps are just around the corner, major TV networks are gearing up for the epic battle of who will come out on top of the Nielsen ratings each week.

Many new shows surfaced in the fall and are returning from their winter hiatus. "Grey's Anatomy" came back, and a two-part episode concludes tonight. There's talk that it again will have a heart-wrenching episode after the Super Bowl.

But let's turn our attention to the new shows that just debuted on MTV. Yes, reality television is not really reality, but for some reason, I just can't get enough of the spoiled rich kids on the lineup, even though I enjoy making fun of them more than being interested in their lives.

"The Hills" follows "Laguna Beach" veteran Lauren Conrad (LC) who basically whines about how difficult her life is despite how she somehow landed an internship at Teen Vogue and drives around in her Mercedes convertible. But no matter how hard I try to quit, I still want to see what happens next.

Next is "Dancelife" with J.Lo, which follows six people in the harsh dance world in Los Angeles. This is another show I'm pretty sure is scripted, but I can't wait to see more.

Yes, there are more substantial shows out there in TV land, but I will just have to file most of the MTV and reality shows out there under "guilty pleasures" for the TV season.

"I'm from Rolling Stone" follows the paths of six young writers who are trying to land the dream job of becoming a contributing editor for Rolling Stone. I don't really know how I feel about my chosen profession being turned into a reality show, but we will see as the show progresses.

"Two-A-Days" will be back for a new season on Jan. 30 as it follows the new crop of high school football hopefuls in Hoover, Ala. Tune in at 9 p.m. and see how the drama unfolds. To catch up, watch full episodes on MTV.com.

And lastly, "The Real World" is currently on Wednesdays. I must ask, where do they find these people? Drama is all it is, and it's mostly just people crying or screaming. Also, after a long hiatus, "Road Rules" is back. This time it's the "Viewers' Revenge." Tune in at 10 p.m. Jan. 23.

For a complete list of shows, visit www.MTV.com.

Lohan checks into rehab

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Lindsay Lohan has checked into rehab.

"I have made a proactive decision to take care of my personal health. I appreciate your well wishes and ask that you please respect my privacy at this time," said the 20-year-old actress in a statement issued Wednesday through her publicist, Leslie Sloane Zelnick.

Us Weekly reports that Lohan entered the posh Wonderland Center at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Zelnick confirmed to The Associated Press in December that Lohan was attending Alcoholics Anonymous meetings.

"I haven't had a drink in seven days. Or anything," she said to People. "I'm not even legal to, so why would I? I don't drink when I go to clubs. I drink with my friends at home, but there's no need to."

Last July, Lohan was treated at a Los Angeles area hospital for overheating and dehydration on the set of "Georgia Rule."

The actress, whose other screen credits include "Mean Girls," "Bobby," and "A Prairie Home Companion," recently had surgery to remove her appendix.

Starbucks planning brews controversy

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the city of Manhattan continues its growth spurt, some citizens are concerned about the potential consequences of a new business in Aggieville. Starbucks' new Manhattan branch, expected to open in Aggieville this summer, is creating controversy over a recently approved drive-thru.

"We really won't know until the shop is constructed — it's kind of a wait-and-see thing," said Bud Cox, owner of Coco Bolo's Wood Fire Grill and Cantina, which is next door to the planned Starbucks location. "I can't really get too worked up until the thing is done."

The problem stems from a zoning board decision that allowed Starbucks the opportunity to build a new branch at 1219 Bluemont Ave. The proposed branch is set to include a full drive-thru, a plan some say breaks zoning regulations.

A proposed drive-thru must have 26 feet of space between the drive and parking, according to zoning requirements for the Aggieville Business Association. The proposed Starbucks drive is designed to allow 12 feet.

"This project has the potential for problem, as Aggieville already has a limited number of parking spots," Cox said.

According to business owners, parking is the primary concern. Allowing a drive-thru off of Bluemont Avenue, though, will have its own complications.

"People just speed around that corner coming from the west. It might be easy to miss two or three cars stacked up," Cox said. "It's actually illegal to make a left-hand turn into (the) Coco Bolo's parking lot, so there will have to be some refiguring on that side, too."

One reason the Starbucks design might have been approved is that Gambino's Pizza, the previous tenant, provided a drive-up service. However, business owners contend a drive-up and a drive-thru are two different things.

"Gambino's was different from a typical drive-thru as it was more of a curbside pick-up," Cox said. "It didn't wrap around the whole building, and there was no line. I bet you can really stack up cars with all those caramel macchiato lattes."

Cox said it was not the nature of the business that upset him, but rather the proximity to his restaurant. In fact, he said construction has been relatively painless so far.

"I've talked to the foreman a few times, and I feel like he's going to do a good job," Cox said.

The Aggieville Business Association has worked to encourage its customers to walk in Aggieville, straying away from crowding the area with increased traffic.

MLK Observation Week Luncheon keynote speaker and 1990 Miss America winner Dr. Debbye Turner shares stories from her life and the experiences she had that helped her become who she is today. Turner graduated with a degree in veterinary medicine from the University of Missouri in 1991 and now works as a correspondent for CBS's The Early Show.

One former beauty queen has faith, not just in herself, but in others.

"I do believe in every fiber of my being that we are here by faith," former Miss America Debbye Turner said during a speech at a luncheon Thursday in the Union Ballroom.

The speech was part of Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week. Black Student Union, the College of Veterinary Medicine, the K-State Student Union Director's Office, the Student Government Association Diversity Programming Committee and the Office of Diversity sponsored the event. Turner received the Miss Missouri recognition and was named Miss America in 1990. She graduated from the University of Missouri in Columbia in 1991 with a doctorate in veterinary medicine. She has been a staff correspondent with "The Early Show" on CBS since 2001.

She quoted King several times during the course of her speech.

"Dr. King had faith," she said. "He had great faith. He said, 'Faith is taking the first step when you aren't sure there is a staircase.'"

"When he said he had a dream, he wasn't a narcoleptic who sat around dreaming all day. He was talking about faith. He had faith, and so should we."

Growing up in Jonesboro, Ala., Turner said she developed an understanding of human nature.

"I have seen some of the most egregious things that can be done to humans," she said. "It's easy to get jaded, sarcastic, disillusioned or pass of pessimism as realism."

"In my lifetime, I have seen a cross burning on my front lawn. I have been called the n-word. People have disparaged minorities."

Students enjoy variety, cost of Winter Expo activities

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of people got out of the cold and found a good time in the K-State Student Union last night during the Wildcat Winter Expo.

The annual event is sponsored by the Union Program Council and is designed to entertain students with a night of fun and free activities.

"It is here to provide inexpensive ways to entertain the campus," said Kelly Brannin, senior in kinesiology and UPC member. "It is cold outside, and there's not much to do in Manhattan."

The line was long at the tie-dyeing stand, where people could pick the colors to have their own tie-dyed shirts made. This was the first stop for Susan Dolan, freshman in apparel marketing, and her friends.

"It was my first time ever tie-dyeing," Dolan said. "I think it has brought a lot of people. There are only large and extra large shirts left, so obviously a lot of people have stopped by."

Many people also waited to get a 60-second caricature.

"So far the caricature has been my favorite part," Elise Neuer, junior in wildlife biology said. "Sixty seconds and he can draw your whole face. It's impressive."

Saturday to mark opening of alum's bar in Aggieville

By Elliott Beach
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brett Allred is living what many students might consider college dream — he's opening his own bar.

Tanks Tavern, 712 N. Manhattan Ave., opens at noon Saturday.

Allred, 23, is a K-State alumnus who formerly owned a hot tub business in Manhattan and also worked at several Aggieville bars and restaurants.

"I really enjoy the bar business," Allred said. "Everyone who works in a bar wants to own a bar. I'm the only one who is dumb enough to actually do it."

Tanks Tavern is a bar and dance club, he said, and will be more spacious than other establishments in the area.

"This will be kind of upscale for Manhattan," he said. "More like the bars around the Kansas City, (Mo.), area. It's going to be really high-energy. You'll be able to move around easier and not get bumped and be able to get a drink."

Allred's dog Tank, a pit bull mix, is the bar's namesake and is expected to be at the bar at all times. Allred said there is no legal problem having a dog at the bar, because the bar will not serve food.

The bar is occupying the space next to CD TradePost, which was home to an entertainment store called Game Guy but has been vacant for more than two years.

The vacancy was caused when a two-story construction site across the alley collapsed into the building in May 2004.

The building is in much better shape now than it was back then, Allred said, but there was still a lot of work left to be done Thursday night while Allred and his employees put the finishing touches on the place. Plenty of dust, many tools, some extension cords, a few dog dishes and a leash still were scattered on the floor.

Christina Pacheco, sophomore in interior design, is a staff member at Tanks. She said she knows many of the people on the Tanks crew.

"He needed girls to work," Pacheco said, "and it's exciting to work where you're going to know everybody."

—Logan C. Adams contributed to this story.

Brett Allred, owner of Tanks Tavern, works on some of the final touches to his new bar as Danny Pasternack, senior in social science, helps Thursday evening in Aggieville. The bar opens Saturday at noon.

Student Senate approves resolution supporting PROUD campaign

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate members unanimously approved a resolution supporting the K-State PROUD Campaign Thursday night at their first meeting of the semester.

Although the resolution was introduced during the meeting, Privilege Fee Committee Chair Matt Wagner moved special orders for the resolution to receive unanimous consent.

Joe Vossen and Jenna Kennedy, co-chairs of the PROUD campaign advisory board, gave a presentation during the meeting's first open period.

Vossen said PROUD Campaign members are looking forward to 100-percent participation from Senate members.

"This campaign is all about helping students," Vossen, senior in political science, said. "This is just one more extension of the K-State family that we're all so proud of talking about."

As part of K-State's $500-million Changing Lives Campaign, the K-State PROUD

Campaign began Jan. 11 and is a philanthropic effort for and led by students.

A series of events for students who donate $10 or more are scheduled for Feb. 12-19.

"I think that you guys get to see firsthand why K-State is so great," Kennedy, senior in microbiology, said. "This is a way that we can share with students the joy of philanthropy at K-State."

Student Senate Chair Ashley Boldt spoke on the positive side after the resolution's approval.

"I hope that you really take in how important it is that the first organization that was presented this idea of the K-State PROUD Campaign was Student Senate and SGA," Boldt, senior in family studies and human services, said.

In other business, Senate members unanimously approved two resolutions for approval of appointments. William Lopez, junior in finance, is Senate's recording secretary, and Nick Levendofsky, senior in agricultural journalism and communications, is the elections commissioner.

Wildcat Walk now teamed with K-State Police Department to ensure safety

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Throughout the semester, many students will find themselves walking on campus after the sun goes down, possibly because of a study session or a night class.

Though a late-night campus visit might be necessary, it also can lead to a scary and potentially dangerous walk home in the dark.

Students who would rather not be on campus alone have the option of calling Wildcat Walk to ensure they get home safely. Security or police officers will escort them up to six blocks off campus.

"It's a great thing," said Adam Shamburg, freshman in sociology and K-State Police Department student dispatcher. "And it's safe."

Wildcat Walk has been operating on campus for more than 10 years, said Troy Lane, assistant chief with the K-State Police Department. Various student organizations originally ran Wildcat Walk but now the campus police department operates the program.

The number of people using Wildcat Walk varies greatly, Shamburg said. On busy weeks Wildcat Walk normally will get about 10 calls, but on slow weeks they might receive only one or two calls.

"Usually the people who use it are people who have used it multiple times," Shamburg said.

After some frightening encounters, Emily Sisk, senior in education, said she is scared to walk alone on campus at night. This is a problem for her since many of her classes are night classes.

"There are people on our campus who aren't even students here," Sisk said. "I don't trust people. I think there are some people who have negative intentions."

Though Sisk said she feels unsafe when walking alone at night on campus, she has never taken advantage of the Wildcat Walk.

"I try to park close," Sisk said. "But if there ever was a time I was really concerned, I would use it."

Sisk said if she had a major that required her to be on campus late at night, like a major requiring studio hours, she would be more likely to use the Wildcat Walk system.

"Many of those majors, like interior design, have predominantly female students," Sisk said. "Wildcat Walk is a good option for them."

Lane said there is no way to know if Wildcat Walk has made a difference in the crime on campus, but he likes to think it has.

"At the very least it makes people feel safer to have someone walking with them at night," he said.

The program runs seven days a week from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m.

Students who want someone to walk them home can call 395-SAFE (7233).

Empire of junk

Tricky advertising tactics render spam blockers ineffective

The sheer, rapturous joy of checking e-mail; a thing once so novel the simple act of reading a note from aunt Maude rendered one avant-garde rapidly has diminished to a point of normality, or at times, active dread.

It is not that I find the process burdensome — indeed, spontaneous correspondence with those in dingy corners of the globe offers a certain amount of flair.

It might not be me, personally, performing rectal exams on elephants in Zambia, but the fact such a person undoubtedly exists, and is a quick MySpace.com search away makes me feel like I possess some kindred existence with those whose purpose in life is pachyderm poopers.

I do, however, wonder in the late hours of the night which grand Dali Lama of marketing dared to dream that sending loathsome e-mails to every single individual on the face of the planet was an effective advertising platform.

Surely by now someone has tried to patent the process of e-junkmailing.

We only can assume failure, as anyone who owned these rights and doled them out for a modest fee would be — rough estimate — a kajillionaire.

Junk mail, or spam as the modern youth spit it, not only infests the Internet, we feel it an easy leap to make that it comprises the Web as a whole, a sort of fully operational log cabin resting shakily on a bed of hungry termites.

Lord knows K-State's Webmail sustains endless amounts of spam — discerning valid communications from the pleas of a Nigerian widow urging me to help her spirit her millions out of the country has become an ever-growing task.

As epic and action-packed as the information superhighway may be, all roads do have their limits. I don't know what an information-highway traffic jam would look like.

The imagination conjures images of crates of illicit Rolexes (Roli?) tossed about while letters to and from mom weave through traffic — maybe a semi-truck full of porn overturned in the median.

We can only wonder: from where and from whom does this deluge spring?

I guard my e-mail address greedily, like some Scrooge hoarding candy freshly stolen from babies, yet I find myself unable to dodge the endless volley.

There apparently is quite a market for "enlarging your manhood safely and naturally" — as I receive offers to do so several times a day — but how I got on the little-ding-ding mailing list is a mystery yet to be solved.

Experience teaches us people only continue doing things that work, which means there live, perhaps uncomfortably close to small children, those who seem to think buying pharmaceuticals spelled using numbers instead of vowels is a good idea.

I certainly have committed a fair share of rather stupid mistakes, but what strange breed convinces itself buying CIALIS and VIAGRA from drugdude@dudesdrugs.ur is a sound financial investment?

There are rumblings that the Internet, rather than being the singing and dancing monster from "Young Frankenstein," has become the low budget, lurching knock-off from "Return of the Bride of Frankenstein's Son Part Two," which nobody wants.

The pioneers of Internetdom surely meant well, what with providing access to information, instantaneous global communication and giving outlet to that video of a bulldog on a skateboard.

We know we have the stuff to make something neat, but I would feel better if the medium did not include shrouded beings inquiring as to my kid sister's manhood.

Under Sebelius' plan, Kansas set to become health care leader

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius has made several moves in her time as Kansas' governor that many Kansans might disagree with.

But her newest proposal, usually delegated as strictly a liberal idea, is receiving interest from both sides of the political spectrum.

Sebelius proposed last week to set aside $4 million beginning next year to provide health coverage for all children 5 years old and younger. Kansas is one of only three states to propose an expansion of its health care systems.

One of those governors calling for universal health care actually is a Republican. That's right, Republican Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger of California. The Governor has started to work with the same people he famously called "girlie men" in a George H.W. Bush campaign rally in 1988.

This should not be a partisan issue. Providing health coverage to all citizens will not increase the control of the government to a totalitarian level. Instead, it will provide assistance for all people, not just those who can afford insurance.

Sure, it will cost a little more, but that is money insurance companies and hospitals can afford.

The plan in Massachusetts, which is the only one enacted so far, calls for money originally set aside for emergency hospital care for the uninsured to be redirected to provide for the increased health insurance. The plan also will charge a fee to companies that do not provide health coverage, according to an article from the Los Angeles Times.

The following headline from www.insurancenetnews.com proves my point: "Health care plan could 'terminate' Californians' premium savings." It would be terrible for those people in Beverly Hills to lose a brand-new spa because of the plan.

I would love to be rich some day, but I think I could give up my "premium savings" to help promote a healthy, insured America.

I am not the only one willing to give up unnecessary cash inflow. According to the Los Angeles Times, a trade group representing many influential health firms has joined with Democratic leaders and various unions to advocate the extension of the U.S. health care system.

The trade group mainly was responsible for producing the poor image of universal health care when President Bill Clinton introduced it in 1994.

Now the group is one of the leading advocates. Why the transformation?

It could be because 55 percent of Americans approve of a system similar to those proposed in California and Massachusetts. It could be because more people across the nation are uninsured. In California, for example, more than 6.5 million people are uninsured.

Although the current plan by Sebelius only will cover children younger than 6, it is a step in the right direction, a direction Kansas has not faced in a while.

Many people think of Kansas as the state that outlawed evolution where only rednecks and racists dwell. Now Kansas is one of the leading states in bringing back the liberal idea of universal health care.

Improved Wildcat Walk program a good alternative to braving the streets alone

Night classes, tests and those extra-long study sessions in the library often mean late-night campus walks for students to get to their cars or homes.

The idea can be a scary one for some students, and fortunately, Wildcat Walk is available to everyone who might want some company for those lonely treks.

For 10 years, Wildcat Walk has helped students get home safely, and now the K-State Police Department is in charge of the program. Security or police officers are at students' beck and call — literally. Students only need to call the Wildcat Walk number for someone to walk with them wherever they need to go, and the process couldn't get much easier: the number is (785) 395-SAFE. An officer will accompany you as far as six blocks from campus from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m.

Darkness can be scary for multiple reasons, however; there is no reason for students to brave the streets (or sidewalks) alone at night if they do not feel comfortable doing so. Even if they do, walking alone at night is not the safest choice.

As recently as last semester, K-State students were attacked and robbed, and worse things still can happen. Taking the necessary precautions to ensure one's own safety is basic common sense.

If it is too late to call a roommate or a friend for a ride, the friendly folks at Wildcat Walk are there to help students feel safer in the dark.

It will be a while before there are more hours of daylight, and until then, students might as well take advantage of the services the university provides.

Dedication ceremony for MLK bust today

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An installation ceremony for a bronze bust of Martin Luther King will be at noon today at the southeast corner of Ahearn Field House.

The program is a part of the Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week and will include the unveiling of the bust and drawing of the Coretta Scott King Garden of Engagement.

Myra Gordon, associate provost for diversity and dual career development, said the ceremony will feature music and various speakers, including the sculptor of the bust, Dick Bergen.

"Students should attend because this is history in the making," Gordon said. "No one else has this unique confluence of history and tribute. Very few men of any color have had the lasting influence of Dr. King."

James Reynolds, an Emmy-nominated actor, will be the keynote speaker of the installation ceremony. Reynolds is a native Kansan and the longest-running African American actor on television, where he portrayed Abe Carver for 30 years in the series "Days of Our Lives," Gordon said.

She said the idea for the project began as a plaque honoring King, but later developed into a bust, and now a monument complete with gardens.

"The bust was chosen because it is one of the highest honors anyone can pay to another person," she said. "It is a physical manifestation of admiration and appreciation, and it is something that will last into perpetuity."

La Barbara Wigfall, associate professor of landscape architecture, and regional and community planning, is the adviser of the K-State chapter of National Organization of Minority Architecture Students.

Members of the organization designed a drawing of the garden that will be unveiled along with the bust, Wigfall said.

She said the students were able to design the garden after the former president of the organization proposed the idea.

Wigfall said the members brainstormed and came up with three spaces that would be in the garden. The spaces are reflections, education and action.

"The students have done a magnificent job of interpreting Martin Luther King Jr. as a person," she said. "Everything in the design has a symbolic meaning."

In order to keep the site sacred, Wigfall said the bust will be placed in the general area of the garden until the installation is complete.

"I think the most wonderful thing is the name of the garden – the fact that it is a Garden of Engagement," Wigfall said.

"When you think about the three spaces, they interact in a way that talks about engagement of a diverse population, and that's what Dr. King stood for."

TO THE EDITOR

Political cartoon offensive to members of the armed services

Editor,

I am writing to you concerning Donnie Lee's political cartoon from Jan. 17.

I am familiar with the incident that is the basis for this cartoon. I am aware of all the discussion relating to the foreign policy decisions of President Bush's administration. I also am aware many people feel the need to comment on these decisions. However, I must take issue with the manner in which Lee has done so.

Three generations of my family, including me, have served in six wars on five different continents. When it comes to things military, we speak from personal experience. By placing his cartoon protagonist in IBA, or interceptor ballistic armor, and placing an American flag on his right shoulder – the uniform of a U.S. Army soldier – Mr. Jay insults my family, my comrades in arms and all the of the honorable men and women who have served this country.

I am a firm believer in the freedoms of this country. Like every soldier, sailor, airman and marine, I swore an oath to defend those freedoms. K-State talks about diversity, tolerance and all sorts of other high-sounding words. The list of individuals and groups you will not overtly insult in your paper is long, but apparently the men and women who defend those freedoms don't make the cut.

I would ask that you and your staff do one small thing. Tonight when you go home, look yourselves in the mirror and ask, "Am I worth dying for?" That's exactly what all those men and women you insulted are willing to do – protect your freedom, your country and your way of life or die trying.

Editor,

As I opened the Kansas State Collegian on Jan. 17, and my eyes gravitated towards the political cartoon, I found myself in disbelief. I served in the U.S. Army for eight years and am a combat veteran of the Iraq War.

As a college student, I was under the impression I was surrounded by intelligent, accepting people. Today I was proven wrong. I, as with most of my fellow soldiers, served and still are serving this country with honor, integrity and selfless service.

These qualities are lacking in the heart and soul of Donnie Jay and his "political" cartoon. The slanderous image in the Collegian not only paints a horribly negative image of what a soldier is, but also attacks everything we stand for and only adds fuel to the fire of a growing sect of extremist beliefs.

The image printed in the Collegian simply has made a mockery of today's American soldier, and I am ashamed at the editors of the paper. Even though it might have been unintentional, which I doubt, the blatant disregard and lack of respect for not only soldiers but Americans in general disgusts me.

The liberal, one-sided views of the Collegian have finally reared their ugly head. So in the future, Donnie Jay, when the evil powers that be come knocking on your door and you find yourself wetting your pants in a corner, remember the "political" cartoon, and only then will you understand why no one ever will come to your aid.

Chuck Armstrong misses professed aim of 'fair and balanced'

Editor,

Last week, Chuck Armstrong blasted the Associate Press article, "Military nurse recalls softer Saddam."

Saddam Hussein should receive no sympathy for the choices he made as the leader of Iraq. However, I didn't find the article sympathetic to Saddam. What I read was a factual, eyewitness account of the fallen dictator's life in prison.

The existence of such an article is acceptable because despite being a terrible person, Hussein was a human being.

The printing of such an article is essential to democracy.

I defer to Thomas Jefferson, who wrote, "Where the press is free, and every man able to read, all is safe." While Armstrong pays lip service to the virtue of a fair and balanced press, his argument that he sees "no need for Americans to read a sympathetic article" is contrary to that idea.

There also is a practical aspect to doubting the wisdom of hanging Hussein. Perhaps, Mr. Armstrong, you read the Telegraph article "Shia hostages hanged in streets in revenge for Saddam's execution?"

Perhaps you heard about the dozens of children who have killed their playmates by reenacting the scenes they saw on television, or read about the medallions of Hussein, the martyr, being sold in Palestine? Think twice, Mr. Armstrong. Critical contemplation is the justification for articles such as the ones you would so willingly censor.

INSURGENTS CLAIM RESPONSIBILITY FOR CONVOY ATTACK

CAIRO, Egypt – An al-Qaida-linked coalition of Iraqi Sunni insurgents claimed responsibility Thursday for an attack in Baghdad on a convoy of a Western democracy institute that killed a 28-year-old Ohio woman and three security contractors.

The Washington-based National Democratic Institute identified its slain staffer as Andrea Parhamovich of Perry, Ohio. Contractors from Hungary, Croatia and Iraq also were killed in the ambush Wednesday. Two other people were wounded, one seriously.

Parhamovich, a graduate of Marietta College in southeast Ohio, had been working with NDI in Iraq since late 2006 as a communications specialist advising Iraqi political parties on how to reach out to voters and constituents.

In the rural neighborhood where Parhamovich's parents live, David Rolfe of NDI and Parhamovich's brother-in-law, Joe Zampini, stood at a church across the road and asked reporters not to approach the family's home. Zampini appealed for privacy and said the family was in seclusion.

The community of about 1,100 people, about 35 miles east of Cleveland, is known for its flower nurseries and greenhouses that take up acres of land, as well as being home to a nuclear power plant.

Tom Perry, spokesman for Marietta College, knew Parhamovich when she worked in the school's media relations office as a student.

"So it hit us as hard as anybody here because we knew her so well," Perry said. "We're proud she wanted to do this. It shows it's not just the soldiers who are in harm's way."

HEAVY RAIN AND STRONG WINDS KILL 25 IN NORTHERN EUROPE

LONDON – Hurricane-force winds and heavy downpours hammered northern Europe on Thursday, killing 25 people and disrupting travel for tens of thousands – including Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, whose plane was forced to circle for 15 minutes before landing amid winds gusting to 77 mph.

The storms were among the fiercest to batter northern Europe in years, ripping off part of the roof at Lord's Cricket Ground in London, toppling a crane in the Netherlands and upending trucks on Europe's busiest highway.

By evening, weather-related accidents had killed 25 people, including a 2-year-old boy hit by falling brick from a toppled wall.

Rice cut short her visit to Berlin in order to leave for London before winds worsened, landing at Heathrow Airport in storm winds gusting up to 77 mph.

"It's not often you get winds of that sort of strength that far inland," said John Hammond of Britain's weather office. "(Rice) did well to land there, I wouldn't have fancied doing that."

German meteorologists recorded gusts up to 118 mph, forcing dozens of flight cancellations, shutting schools and prompting the national railroad to suspend services across a swath of the country.

"We are still at a standstill nationwide," with only a few trains running, Hans-Georg Zimmermann, the spokesman of the national railroad.

Hartmut Mehdorn, chief executive of Deutsche Bahn, said: "We have never yet had such a situation in Germany."

Don't focus on the sour; keep it sweet

Life must be tough as a University of Florida student.

Think for a second how different your life could be if you decided, however many years ago it was when you were picking your future alma mater, to make the trek to Gainesville, Fla., and become a Gator.

I know it would have been a long way from home and very expensive, but just think about it for a minute.

You probably awoke to the sweet humming of birds outside your window this morning. Your window was open, of course. Why wouldn't it be? There's nothing better than a 60-or-70 degree breeze blowing gently across your face to wake you up.

As you stumble out of bed, you suddenly realize you're late for class. But who cares? Everybody — even professors — have been so relaxed since your school's 41-14 triumph over Ohio State in the BCS championship game it doesn't really matter if you're a few minutes tardy.

Ah, what to wear? Do you choose the orange 2006 NCAA basketball championship T-shirt, or the blue Chris Leak jersey, which you ordered after his MVP performance in the championship game? Finally, you decide on the T-shirt, toss some books in your backpack and head to class.

But wait. On your way out, you can't help but notice your roommate watching highlights on TV of your No. 1-ranked Gator basketball team drubbing another Southeast Conference opponent. Even though you were at the game, you stop for a couple extra minutes to see Joakim Noah and company putting on a clinic. Yes, the defending national champions are back on top of the college basketball world.

You were scared there for a little bit. Although the Gators were ranked No. 1 in the preseason polls, they struggled out of the gates — losing to Kansas and Florida State early in the season. But now all is right — Florida sits at 16-2 and undefeated in SEC play.

After all, what would the world come to if a Florida team was not ranked No. 1 in football or basketball?

Now, snap back to reality — which in this case is Manhattan. Are you jealous yet?

I sure am not. Go ahead, Florida. You can have your national championships and pro prospects in every sport and perfect weather and trips to the beach and beautiful women.

OK, maybe I am a little jealous. But I'm perfectly fine with scraping ice off my car, wondering if I might get frostbite on the walk to class and watching incredibly mediocre sports teams.

I bet all those Gator fans are getting tired of being the best at everything. It has to get a little boring, doesn't it? Where would we be without everything we have to complain about here at K-State?

I heard a quote once that sums it up: "The sweet wouldn't be nearly as sweet without the sour."

That might be true, but tasting sour for a long time does get kind of old.

Natasha Vieira is the fourth K-State women's tennis player from Venezuela. In the fall, the freshman compiled a singles record of 5-5. Prior to arriving at K-State, she was rated the No. 254 junior player by the International Tennis Federation rankings.

Freshman copes with new country, culture

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Natasha Vieira didn't even like tennis when she first started playing.

Vieira, who began playing tennis at the age of 8 in her home of Carabobo, Venezuela, only took up the game because her mother enrolled her in tennis camp.

"I was playing all the time with balls," she said. "We had a wall in our backyard and I would hit it over and over again with the ball. I was also very messy so my mom put me in summer camp."

Vieira, who has played tennis for ten years now, said she didn't immediately take to it.

"At first, I didn't like it at all," she said. "I hated it because I wasn't good."

That quickly changed. In 2006, Vieira was ranked as high as No. 254 in the International Tennis Federation Junior rankings and was regarded as the No. 2 junior player in Venezuela.

Vieira, the sole freshman on the tennis team, is the fourth K-State player to hail from Venezuela. Before her came Jessica Simosa, Judith Diaz and junior Viviana Yrureta.

What attracted coach Steve Bietau to Vieira was her mental state, he said.

"She's got a good head on her shoulders," he said. "She competes well and I found her coachable."

The transition from the tropical climate of Venezuela to the dry, seasonal Kansas was difficult for Vieira.

"We didn't really have seasons where I lived," she said. "It was 30 degrees Celsius (86 degrees Fahrenheit) all the time. The beach was one hour away from where I lived."

Even harder than the weather patterns was the adjustment of a new country and new people.

"I had friends in Venezuela and here, I had to start a new life living all by myself," she said. "At home, my parents cooked and cleaned for me."

Bietau said in addition to her coachability, Vieira's work ethic has really stood out to him.

Vieira's teammate, Tamar Kvaratskhelia, said part of the improvement Vieira made during the fall was her desire to improve.

"She's improved a lot because she had the wish to play better," she said.

Although Vieira might not always be on the court, Kvaratskhelia said she still contributes.

Senior Olga Klimova said she agreed with Kvaratskhelia.

"When she's not out on the court, she's always cheering," she said. "She also cheers really loud, which is a booster for the team. She's a really good player and a good friend."

Had she stayed in Venezuela, Vieira would not have been able to play tennis at the collegiate level due to academic time constraints.

"I knew students had to study really hard and there's no time to practice tennis, so I started trying to come on to America."

Vieira said her main reason for coming to the United States was the university. Vieira is majoring in business administration.

"I wanted to come here because there are more job opportunities," she said. "The colleges here are really good and teach well, and students leave college prepared for their jobs."

As a member of the team, Vieira said she's trying to help K-State improve. In 2006, the Wildcats finished 11-10 overall and 6-5 in the Big 12 Conference.

"I hope we get a better position in the Big 12," she said. "I go out expecting a win in all of my matches. I just want to help K-State get a better position. I think we can do it."

K-State hopes for better luck at Ames

By Jeffrey Rake
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former K-State men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge always had his team in position to beat Iowa State on the road, only they were never able to do it.

Now it's up to coach Bob Huggins to see if he can finally get K-State over the top.

In six road games against Iowa State under Wooldridge — all losses — the Wildcats lost by an average of just four points per game and never lost by more than six points.

That includes last year's 72-70 defeat in Ames, Iowa, in the Wildcats' Big 12 Conference opener.

With a chance to pick up its third straight conference win after an 0-2 start, K-State (12-6, 2-2 Big 12) will look to beat the Cyclones on their home court for the first time since a 67-62 victory in 1999.

"I don't think it's the atmosphere there, we just haven't gone the extra mile to get the win (in previous years)," senior Lance Harris said. "We've had tight games there before... we just didn't finish the ball games."

Like K-State, the Cyclones have a first-year coach in Greg McDermott, who signed a six-year contract in March after a previous coaching stint at Northern Iowa.

His Cyclones (11-7, 2-2 Big 12) are off to a solid start, but after two straight Big 12 losses — to Kansas, then to Colorado — Iowa State might be a dangerous team, especially on a home floor where they generally play above their level.

"They play well at home and like every team, you want to defend your home court," junior Clint Stewart said. "For us going in there, we just have to stick together and fight through it. There's no reason why we can't come out with a win."

Junior Mike Taylor, who leads the Cyclones offensively, averages a team-high 16.5 points per game.

Huggins said he's impressed by Iowa State's athleticism, but also pointed out their apparent intellect.

"I don't know how (Greg) gets those guys to remember all that stuff. They run a lot of stuff," Huggins said. "I can't get our guys to remember two sets. And they run — a lot of their guys say — 32 sets against a zone."

BKW | Wildcats continue Big 12 schedule without Gipson

After suffering a narrow 70-63 defeat Wednesday at Nebraska, the Wildcats will once again hit the road as they travel to

Gipson

Waco, Texas, to face the No. 13 Baylor Bears.

K-State (14-3, 2-2 Big 12) overcame a 24-point halftime deficit against the Huskers, but were unable to completely recover from a first half full of weak defense and poor shooting.

"We got ourselves into a hole, and that's something you can't do in Big 12 basketball," sophomore Shalee Lehning said. "We've got to work on putting two halves together, and that's what we're gonna do."

The Wildcats will have to do just that as they face a Baylor team that leads the nation in blocked shots. The Bears (15-3, 1-1) are led by senior Bernice Mosby, who is averaging 18.1 points and 9.3 rebounds per game.

This will be the second game the No. 25 Wildcats have to play without Marlies Gipson, who was sidelined with a knee injury. This could affect K-State's chances at building an effective inside presence, but the team is confident they still can work around Baylor's defensive pressure, junior Kimberly Dietz said.

"We're just taking it step by step," Dietz said. "We're up for any challenge, so if we can go (inside) and do it, we'll do it — and if not, we'll be taking threes."

Though Gipson, who has averaged 12.8 points and 8.3 rebounds per game this season, will not play Saturday, Patterson said she is confident the sophomore forward soon will be back on the floor.

RUN | Wildcat track team to compete in Conference Challenge

Scott Sellers and Laci Heller already have earned trips to the NCAA Indoor Championships, and they're hoping more of their teammates will join them by qualifying this Saturday. The Wildcat track and field team will take part in the first-ever Conference Challenge in Lincoln, Neb., at Bob Devaney Sports Center.

The meet will consist of Nebraska, Missouri and K-State from the Big 12 Conference and Air Force and Colorado State from the Mountain West Conference.

"This meet might be a little less competitive in some areas and stronger in others," said coach Cliff Rovelto, who will be sending throwers to this meet after they sat out last meet.

Heller, a junior, provisionally qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships on March 9-10. She qualified with a weight throw of 65-1/4 on Jan. 5-6 at the KSU Invitational.

"Everyday we all push each other," Heller said. "Each day is a competition."

Sellers, a sophomore high jumper, is the only member of the men's team who qualified for the NCAA meet with a jump of 7-4 1/4 at the KSU All-Comers meet on Dec. 9.

TEN | Tennis team opens spring season with Georgia tournament

The women's tennis team will start a fast-paced tournament schedule this weekend, competing every weekend for team points that could lead to a national ranking. Coach Steve Bietau said the spring is different than the fall lineup of tournaments.

"In the fall, there are individual tournaments," he said. "It's the development season when you make changes in their games. In the spring, you keep the team scores and get rankings."

The tournament begins today, and lasts through Sunday in Athens, Ga. They will compete against Georgia, Mississippi State and Troy in the Georgia Bulldog Invitational.

"After that, the team record is really on the line," Bietau said. "In this tournament, we'll do things we wouldn't normally do, but we're going to see what it looks like when it counts."

The players are looking forward to being back in competition. Junior Tamar Kvaratskhelia said this tournament will be a preview to the rest of her season.

"I'm looking forward to seeing where I am and how I've improved," she said. "I want to see where I am on the competitive level."

From here on out, there are tournaments almost every weekend through the end of April. Kvaratskhelia said she's excited for the spring season.

PEOPLE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD

Wildcat disc jockey aspires to work for a record label

By Mike Kelly
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

His voice is unmistakable and slowly becoming a Manhattan institution. It is not the typical baritone radio voice, but is familiar, light and conversational.

When sitting behind the microphone, Drew Bartlett is in his element. A senior in marketing, Bartlett is K-State radio. A former disc jockey, promotions worker, underwriting director and music director, Bartlett is the program director for KSDB-FM 91.9.

His dedication to the airwaves does not stop on campus. In addition to working as a DJ during his last three years of college, Bartlett is the evening voice of KACZ-FM 96.3 and the Saturday afternoon host on KMKF-FM 101.5.

Q: How did you bust into radio?

A: I grew up always listening to radio. I really liked radio. I came here and this station played the music that I like, and I walked in and saw a guy with a big, pink Mohawk, and he talked to me about the station. It wasn't anything I was considering as a career. It was just something that was fun.

Q: Is it hard to play music you don't personally enjoy?

A: That kind of goes to the fact that I can appreciate different types of music. Like, there can be some song that if I was making music I wouldn't make, but it's a good dance song, and I can appreciate that. There is going to be some stuff that I don't like, but if it's a song I don't like, it doesn't mean that it's a song that the people listening don't like. The job of a DJ is to make people want to keep listening, and once you realize that, the type of music doesn't matter if you can appreciate what it is.

Q: What is your musical taste?

A: Well, I have a really wide musical taste that I listen to. I like a lot of old stuff. I like Bob Dylan. I love the Doors. But I really love 1990s alternative music. That's probably my very favorite — grunge, post-grunge, basic alternative. But, I can really appreciate anything that has substance.

Q: Is being a program director all it's cracked up to be?

A: It has its highs and its lows. Actually, I had more fun with the job when I was music director, because I was directly putting in what was the new music, where as now, it is kind of hard to take a hands-off approach and let my directors do what they want to do. But the good and the bad thing is that everything reflects on me, so I kind of have to handle the conflict and try to have people that will make the station sound good.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Drew Bartlett, senior in marketing, talks on the radio at KSDB-FM 91.9 Thursday afternoon while working during his shift. A former disc jockey, promotions worker, underwriting director and music director, Bartlett is the program director for KSDB-FM 91.9.

Q: Is it important to you that music always be a part of your career?

A: In my entire life, music has always been everything. I've always planned for music to be a part of my career. What I ultimately want to do is work for a record label doing A&R, which is artists and repertoire. Basically, we find the talent and bring them to the label. Eventually, I'd like to spur off and start my own kind of record label.

Q: What kind of label would you start?

A: Really, I would like to have a label that focuses on Midwestern acts. The central part of America does not get a lot of representation, and if you want to be signed by a major label, you have to move to L.A., but in Kansas City and St. Louis, there's a really good music scene there, but the bands don't ever get anywhere because they can't pick up and move.

Q: Name three songs that define your personality.

A: "Hairspray Queen" by Nirvana — it really shows how Nirvana was a punk band. They got lumped into grunge, but they're really melodic punk. An Early Bob Dylan song — I really appreciate stuff that can be stripped down acoustically and still convey itself — the whole singer-songwriter thing. "Slinkin' Girl" by 311 — upbeat, fun, but still having some lyrical quality.

K-State architectural engineering students prepare for first-ever national conference

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last year, several members of the K-State chapter of the Architectural Engineering Institute attended a professional conference in Omaha, Neb.

While there, the group was inspired to create an architectural engineering conference specifically directed toward students — and laid the foundations were for the first-ever National Architectural Engineering Institute Student Conference.

The conference is scheduled for March 30-31 at the Embassy Suites in Kansas City, Kan.

Daniel Matlack, chapter president and senior in architectural engineering, and Megan Miller, national liaison and senior in architectural engineering, are in charge of the planning and hosting duties for the conference. Chapter officers from the universities of Kansas and Nebraska will assist with their duties.

Matlack said they are anticipating approximately 100 students and university faculty from 17 schools accredited in architectural engineering to attend the event.

"We wanted to have something more applicable and appropriate for students, somewhere they could be more exposed to each other and create a network for their future," Matlack said. "Hosting this on the national level provides the opportunity for all levels of engineering and all types of people to come together and share ideas."

After Ray Yunk, K-State chapter adviser and assistant professor of architectural engineering and construction science, proposed the idea of hosting a student conference, Matlack said the officers set out to make it happen.

The early stages of planning the conference involved filling out and submitting a detailed student conference application. Five K-State chapter officers handled this responsibility. The KU and UNL chapters were the first to approve the application, followed by the national chapter.

Although the planning team had just seven months to arrange an entire conference, the six members said they were able to work well together by delegating assignments and handling important tasks immediately.

"In the beginning, our biggest concern was time, but all of the schools have really pulled together to make this happen," said Miller. "We figured out what needed to be done right

Arts center fundraiser will feature 'Monty Python' sketch comedy

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The works of the British comedy troupe Monty Python will be featured this weekend at the Manhattan Arts Center.

The Monty Python IV Fun(draiser) is at 8 tonight and Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday at the arts center.

The show includes performances of classic sketches the group performed on its BBC television show, "Monty Python's Flying Circus," which premiered in 1969.

"There will be a lot of different sketches in the show," said Mary Tolar, stage manager and member of the company of performers. "There will be 'Nod, Nod, Wink, Wink,' the organ transplant scene from 'The Meaning of Life,' and many, many others."

The performance will be more like the TV show than the movies they did, said Tess Purvis, director of marketing and programs for the arts center. It will be all sketches without a connecting plot.

"It is hilarious," she said. "We also thought the people of Manhattan would like something to combat this snow and cold weather."

She also said those who are interested in volunteering at the arts center should contact them for more information.

There will be two intermissions during the evening, with high tea served at both.

"High tea is what a lot of people here would call supper," said Penny Seften, the executive director Tuesday. "It is more substantial and fancy than normal tea."

Student tickets are $15 and general public tickets are $25. There also will be a cash bar for those audience members who are over 21.

The arts center has many performances in the works. "Proof," a play recently turned into a film starring Gwyneth Paltrow and Jake Gyllenhaal, will be performed at the arts center Feb. 23-25 and March 1-4.

In the spring there will be an event called Let Them Eat Cake, a new fundraiser for the arts center. Bakers from the area bring cakes, and tickets to the tasting can be purchased.

After the tasting, the cakes will be auctioned.

Exotic fillings trump traditional vanilla cake

By Heidi Paulson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Apart from the usual issues involved with planning a wedding, picking what the cake will taste like is just as important as choosing what it will look like.

Depending on the type of meal served, if one is served at all, flavors can be carried over from dinner to the ingredients of the wedding cake.

According to www.marthastewart.com, a Mediterranean-themed meal could lead to an orange-flavored cake. Similarly, a cake featuring ginger flavors would complement an Asian-inspired dinner.

Traditionally, though, the bride's cake is layered with white or yellow cake, said Angie Frigon, owner, operator and cake decorator for Three Sisters' Desserts.

"I've been doing cakes for about six years now, and that used to be the tradition," Frigon said. "Any more now, a lot of people are choosing carrot cakes or asking for fillings like strawberry, raspberry, lemon and chocolate."

There also is the issue of the groom's cake. While not all couples choose to have two cakes, the groom's cake traditionally is a rich, chocolate cake, but also could be the groom's favorite pecan pie, Frigon said.

"For fall, I've done several pies including apple, pumpkin and pecan," she said. "Cherry, peach, chocolate and rhubarb pies are popular in the spring."

Other options include more exotic fillings like pistachio flavor, blood orange mousses and coffee-flavored buttercream, according to www.theknot.com.

Frigon said today's engaged couples are trying other new things in addition to the cake.

"Lately, couples have been offering dessert tables with a wider selection of sweets," she said. "Sometimes they pick their favorite deserts like cheesecake with caramel and strawberry toppings for the guests to add themselves."

"Really anything goes anymore," Frigon said. "It's just for the bride and groom to decide the style they want."

Frigon said her best cake so far has been a five-tier, white cake with snowflakes cascading down on a pink and purple, air-brushed sash made of icing.

"My favorite cake is the one on the front page of the Web site www.threesisters-desserts.com, because it fit the season with the snowflakes," she said. "It just really represented the winter wedding the couple had in January, and it was the most challenging technique that I had done so far on a wedding cake."

COURTESY PHOTO

Angie Frigon of Three Sisters' Desserts created this snowflake-themed cake for a winter wedding using an airbrushed frosting sheet cascading down the layers. Frigon said many couples are choosing to stray from the traditional when it comes to the flavors and fillings of the cake, not just the embellishments.

Planning of weddings more difficult for men

Whenever I read about couples getting hitched at football stadiums, I always think, "Who are these women, and what planet do they come from?"

My fiancée would never agree to such a thing, at least not without heavy sedation.

Don't get me wrong, my fiancée and I are really happy together. The trade deadline has passed, and we're both completely satisfied.

It's just that most women, at least those who don't come from the planet Zorg, are generally obsessed with wedding planning.

If you took a poll to find what girls are most interested in, I'm guessing it would go something like this:

1. Weddings
2. Fashion
3. Wedding fashion
4. Books
5. Books about weddings

Meanwhile, the guys' list might include:

1. Sports
2. Blowing stuff up
3. Food
4. Cars
5. Professional wrestling

Therefore, most guys are completely unprepared for the sheer ferocity with which women approach wedding planning.

See, it's a proven scientific fact that diamonds, when combined with estrogen, create a chain reaction of flower arranging, dress shopping and uncontrollable baking.

As a guy, this can come as quite a shock if you don't know what's coming. So that brings us to the purpose of all this: preparing the groom-to-be for the rigors of wedding planning.

When in doubt, I suggest indifference. For instance: HER: "So, honey, do you like the Courier font or the Times New Roman for the wedding invitations?"

YOU: "I think either one would be beautiful, honey."

Beware, however — too much indifference can backfire and result in situations like this:

HER: "You mean (sniff, sniff) that you don't care what color the centerpieces are? This is supposed to be (sniff, sniff, sob) our special day!"

These situations could force you to spend several hours consoling and miss the AFC championship game — so be careful.

Don't worry, though. It's not as bad as it sounds. Even if you end up getting married in a pink tux, surrounded by rose petals and furry woodland animals, you'll still be married at the end of the day.

MTV to begin series on young engaged couples

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Young engaged couples are getting a moment of fame with a new reality series premiering next week.

MTV will launch its new series, "Engaged and Underage," at 8:30 p.m. Monday.

The show's trailer appears on MTV's Web site, beginning with a proposal and a couple stating they are both 19 years old.

Young women show off their rings, and a couple is heard saying, "People say we're too young to get married, but we know we'll be together forever."

The trailer continues with a man looking at his young fiancée, saying he knows everything about her.

But the couples are not living on easy street. One girl's family surrounds her, explaining the statistics are not in her favor.

Parents try to convince their children it's not too late, and one engaged female is told she has only $6 left in her bank account.

One mother says her child will be the first to marry someone of a different race, causing strife in the family, but the young man screams at the video camera, "They can't stop us from getting married. This is what me and you want to do."

The series is spattered with footage of bridal showers, bachelor parties, ceremonies and the pivotal moment — the "I do."

FAITH | Speaker discusses past experiences with discrimination, hopes for future generations, facets of faith

Turner said there have been a few cases in her life where she was discriminated against because of her race. One involved her high school history teacher, who she said told her, "The white kids can't get an A in the class, so you can't either."

She eventually proved him wrong, scoring 100 percent on every test following that statement to earn her A.

Another instance was after she was crowned Miss America.

She said she went into an upscale boutique in Los Angeles and was ignored by a saleslady.

"She didn't think I could afford what was in her store, so I decided I couldn't afford to leave my money there," Turner said.

The third case she described involved an older woman. While Turner stood on the sidewalk, the woman asked her where the bathroom was, thinking she worked there.

"I said, 'Not only do I not work here, I am the current Miss America. I was just on national television. What do you do?'" she said she asked the woman.

Hope is a crucial part of having faith, Turner said.

"In order to have faith, you must have hope," she said. "If you struggle with your faith, I say it's because you don't have enough hope. Faith is hope with flesh on it."

Turner has been a motivational speaker since she was crowned Miss America.

She speaks on various topics, including personal excellence, goal setting, the value of education and determination.

Ben Hopper, program adviser for the Union Program Council, said Turner's message was good for the students to hear.

"I work with entertainers all the time, and she was the best speaker yet," he said. "She was just fun to be around."

Zelia Wiley, assistant dean for the Office of Diversity Program and the College of Agriculture, presented a corsage to Turner on behalf of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority.

She said Turner is someone to look to for inspiration.

"What she represents is an example to us," Wiley said. "She's an example to women, multicultural students and the agriculture students."

Turner said she felt at home here at K-State.

"The people here are warm and welcoming," she said. "I didn't go to school here, and I still felt welcome. I look forward to coming back."

Turner encouraged all to continue to succeed and move forward.

"When you face your darkest hour, your biggest opposition, your greatest challenge, give all of yourself anyway," she said. "When you succeed, you will have false friends and true enemies, but succeed anyway."

Forecasters predict snow for Saturday

By Leann Sulzen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It's a frequent joke in Kansas that if the weather is bad, wait a bit, and it will change. Between the unusual warmth and harsh freeze of the past few weeks, the joke is wearing thin.

Temperatures in Manhattan reached upward of 50 degrees earlier this month. But the days without coats, hats and gloves quickly were forgotten after a three-day stint of sleet and snow chilled the area.

State climatologist Mary Knapp said the sudden change of temperatures was caused by a change in the jet stream, a high-altitude, high-speed current of air that crosses the continent.

The jet stream had been keeping the arctic air Kansas normally gets in the winter months confined to Canada, Knapp said. At the same time, Kansas was getting winds in from the Pacific northwest.

This system brought moisture to the area and caused the freezing rain, sleet and snow when the jet stream pattern changed and the arctic air from Canada found its way to the plains.

Knapp said it isn't typical for the jet stream to take this type of pattern, but it's not strange, either.

"It's kind of hard to tell what triggers a change in the jet stream pattern," she said.

Although the cold temperatures might have given some a jolt, they're not abnormal, said Kyle Poage, meteorologist at the National Weather Service Forecast Office in Topeka.

He said temperatures were only 10-20 degrees below normal — a lot warmer than the single-digit high temperatures the state has experienced.

The roads and walkways of Manhattan could soon be covered again with snow and ice, as the National Weather Service is forecasting more snow for this weekend.

Poage said there is a 70 percent chance of seeing snow on Saturday; however, he said the percentage might increase as new data becomes available.

The National Weather Service Web site, nws.noaa.gov, also listed a 30-percent chance of snow Sunday and a 20-percent chance Monday. High temperatures are forecasted in the low 30s and upper 20s.

Those hoping for a warmup might not have to look long. Poage said February temperatures are forecasted to be above normal. However, current data for February is not reliable enough, he said.

cided that we wanted less drive-thru in Aggieville," said Julie Haynes, member of the business association. "The zoning board has not allowed several proposed drive-thru additions, such as Chiptole."

Despite the concerns of business owners, the Manhattan zoning board approved the project and construction is set to begin shortly.

Steve Zilkie, senior planner for the city of Manhattan, declined to comment for this story.

Starbucks Corporation, which began in Seattle in 1987, is now the world's largest multinational chain of coffee shops, employing over 125,000 worldwide. Some residents of the Manhattan area said Starbucks will be welcomed into the city with open arms.

"Everyone knows Starbucks, it has become a household name," Nilo Fanska, sophomore in horticulture, said. "Personally, I feel that people want to see them be a part of Aggieville. The drive-thru may be hectic, but people will wait for Starbucks."

EXPO | UPC schedules expo to coincide with Spring Activities Carnival

Neuer attended the expo with students who live on the dorm floor where she is a resident assistant. They all agreed one of the main reasons they attended the event was because it was free.

In the past, the expo was the day before classes began. It was in front of the Union bookstore to attract students buying their textbooks. This year UPC decided to try planning the expo in conjunction with the activities carnival to increase the number of visitors.

"We decided it would be a good idea to do it with the spring activities carnival," said Sarah Morton, senior in accounting and UPC president.

Having the expo on the same night as the spring activities carnival worked for UPC.

"We have had a lot more foot traffic today because it's more of a target to come to the Union, unlike last year when we were depending on bookstore traffic," Morton said.

"It's been really busy," Brannin said. "We've had a really good turnout."

CONFERENCE | Scheduled activities include speakers, workshops

Activities scheduled for the conference range from speakers, to workshops, a career fair, and even site tours around Kansas City. The planning committee also has arranged a number of student competitions, such as an essay contest, building contest and a "Joe's vs. Pro's" competition, which gives students and professionals an opportunity to pit themselves against one another with their engineering knowledge.

"I am most excited for the 'Joe's vs. Pros' competition," Matlack said. "The challenge will benefit not only the students, but I think the professionals can also learn a thing or two from us."

Several speakers have been invited to share their expertise at the conference.

Besides touching on a range of engineering styles, students can also learn about the environmentally friendly aspects of modern design and engineering, like the Green Building and LEED projects.

K-State will be sending 15-20 students, but spots are still open. While the conference is recommended for third-, fourth-, and fifth-year architectural engineering students, anyone can apply.

Yunk has worked closely with both Matlack and Miller throughout the organizational process, and said he has been pleased with their leadership skills and determination.

Filmmaker and director of "The Untold Story of Emmett Louis Till," Keith Beauchamp speaks to guests in attendance Thursday evening in the K-State Alumni Center before showing his documentary about a 14-year-old black boy who was murdered in a Mississippi town in 1955.

Documentary sheds light on issues of racism using one boy's story

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Emmett Louis Till was brutally murdered at the age of 14 on August 28, 1955. He was on vacation from Chicago visiting his great uncle Mose Wright in Money, Miss., when he went to pay for something at a grocery store. He touched the saleswoman's hand, and she jumped and later ran out. Till, who was black, then reportedly whistled at the woman, Carolyn Bryant, who later told her husband, Roy Bryant.

Roy Bryant and friend J.W. Milam later kidnapped and murdered Till, whose body was found in the Tallahatchie River three days later.

Till had been beaten, shot in the head and bound with barbed wire by a 70-pound cotton gin fan.

"The Untold Story of Emmett Louis Till," a film by Keith Beauchamp, recounts in detail Till's murder, his mother's strength and the tragic event that sparked a movement.

Students, faculty and members of the community gathered in the K-State Alumni Center Thursday night to watch the film and listen to the man behind the reopening of the murder case.

Filmmaker Keith Beauchamp said he remembers seeing the photo of Emmett Louis Till's dead body in Jet magazine when he was just 10 years old. He has devoted the last 11 years to researching and investigating the murder.

All the while, Beauchamp was under the guidance of Mamie Till Mobley, Emmett's mother, who died in 2003. Mobley had to endure testifying at the trial of her son's killers, both of whom were acquitted.

She also requested an open casket at Till's funeral to display his brutally beaten and mutilated body.

"Let the people see what I have seen," she said in the film. "I want the world to see this."

Reverend Al Sharpton, who appeared in the documentary, mentioned the strength Mobley had to show the body.

"She was able to graphically bring home what a thousand speeches couldn't bring home," he said.

Beauchamp worked closely with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and has now found 14 people that were involved in the Emmett Till case.

"This case is important," he said. "It's important because our generation must not forget those who paved the way for us to exist."

This month, the Mississippi district attorney will decide if state charges will be filed for the murder of Emmett Till, Beauchamp said.

The showing of the film was a part of K-State's Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week. Members of the crowd said they were influenced by different issues in the Till case.

Abby Noll, freshman in open option, said she had read about the case in a class and wanted to know more.

"I enjoyed the film," she said. "I think (Beauchamp) did a good job of telling the story."

She said she grew up in Kansas and tends to forget about the racism of the past.

"We all need to realize how bad it was and still is in certain parts of the country," Noll said.

Amber Tyler, junior in agricultural economics, drew applause from the crowd with her comments about this generation.

She said she feels society has become spoiled and entrenched in technology. She reinforced how important the events of this week are to the students of K-State.

"We need to remember those who put their lives on the line so we can even attend K-State," she said. "Getting people to come to (today's Memorial March) has been like pulling teeth."

She said people have said will be too cold, too early or they don't have class and so don't want to come to campus.

"What if those people — Harriet Tubman, Sojourner Truth, Martin Luther King Jr. — had said 'it's too cold, I'm too tired, I'm too hot,'" she said. "Where would we be today?"

Tyler said K-State students can get involved by attending events like the film and learning from those around them.

Beauchamp concluded the night by answering questions from the audience, but said he wondered if King would be happy with the generations today.

"Dr. King was 26 years old when he put his family life on hold," he said. "It takes perseverance and passion, and we don't realize how much power we possess."

A candlelight vigil followed the program, and Beauchamp was presented with the Alpha Excellence Award by members of Alpha Phi Alpha, who co-sponsored the event with the Student Governing Association.

Beyond the small screen for HBO's 'Sex and the City'

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Just when some have moved on to other sitcoms, the creators of HBO's "Sex and the City" headed back to the studio in hopes of putting the cherry on top of the series-ending project: a movie for the big screen.

The rumor surfaced in November, with OK! Magazine's report that the movie will feature the HBO series' four original stars: Kim Cattrall, Kristen Davis, Cynthia Nixon and Sarah Jessica Parker.

An unnamed source said "substantial negotiations have opened with each of the stars' teams," OK! reported. "Obviously, there is still a lot to be worked out contractually, but it would be amazing to get this project off the ground. There is no doubt that fans cannot wait to see them all reunited."

Other media outlets, including E! Entertainment Television and many foreign newspapers have followed up with similar reports, creating even more media blitz for the possible movie. E! reports the big screen negotiations have been slowed by Cattrall, who played sex-driven Samantha on the hit series. Cattrall reportedly has held back from signing any contract because of an incomplete script and unfair compensation for the principal cast.

Regardless of what the contract will include, sources like celebrity gossip magazine The Star indicate enough time has passed and all four stars are willing to put aside their differences to make the film happen.

"This is like so many other movies, like 'Fantastic Four,'" said Scott

Bauer, owner of Digital Shelf. "They will talk about it for years before they ever do it."

If the movie did go to the big screen, Bauer said it undoubtedly would be popular, based on the success of the series and its cast. The timing, Bauer said, is very important for the movie's success.

"They would have to do it in a hurry because the actresses are getting old," he said. "Getting a few years older, still, it is going to be like an old (19)70s sitcom like the 'Back to the Brady Bunch' series. It wouldn't be the same."

Blue Key chapter hosts convention

By Katelynn Hasler
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Blue Key chapter was presented with awards for outstanding chapter and outstanding chapter president at its national convention Friday and Saturday.

"It was incredible just to have our accomplishments and our work recognized by the national office," said Matt King, senior in political science and Blue Key member. "We do a lot of our work with student organizations anyway for their benefit, but to have this kind of recognition on top of that was great."

This is the first year K-State was host to the annual convention. Blue Key alumni completed most of the organizational work for the event.

"It's a pretty work-intensive process," said Kristen Daniels, Blue Key alumna and senior in nutrition and exercise sciences. "We organize the entire program, bring in speakers and make travel arrangements for all the guests."

Blue Key honors seniors for excellence in all areas of collegiate experience, including scholarship, leadership and service. Eligibility is based on success in those areas and adherence to principles of the group and the university.

K-State's chapter received its awards at a presentation ceremony following two days of presentations and lectures. This marks the third time in a row that K-State received the award for outstanding chapter. It is the first time in six years K-State won the award for outstanding president. Last year's president, Tyson Moore, senior in information systems, received the award.

Eighty-eight students from Blue Key chapters across the country were at the convention, and all chapters were allowed to attend and bring participants. K-State's Blue Key volunteered to be host of the event with Truman State University and the University of Missouri-Rolla assisting.

The convention allowed Blue Key chapters to learn about the activities and organization of chapters

K-State instructor suffers from polycystic ovarian syndrome; informs others with online magazine

By Kristen Roderick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Linda Harvey said she has always known something was not quite right with her body.

Her periods were not normal, she grew hair in abnormal places and she knew something was different.

Finally, in 2001, she went to her gynecologist, who diagnosed her with Polycystic Ovarian Syndrome.

"I had gone to see her for something completely different," said Harvey, instructor in journalism and mass communications. "She looked at me, cocked her head and goes, 'Have you ever been diagnosed with Polycystic Ovarian Syndrome?'"

Harvey said she had not, but her doctor's question made her look more into it.

PCOS

PCOS is a condition that happens to 6 to 10 percent of women of childbearing age, according to the Polycystic Ovarian Syndrome Association. If a woman has PCOS, her ovaries do not make enough hormones they need for eggs to mature. Instead, cysts in the ovaries fill with fluid.

Symptoms of PCOS include the following: irregular or absent menstrual periods, numerous cysts on the ovaries, high blood pressure, acne, elevated insulin levels, infertility, excess hair on the face and body, thinning of the scalp hair and weight problems around the midsection, according to the PCOS Association.

Harvey said she had many of those symptoms, so she decided to see a doctor.

RELIEF

Harvey said after she had the appropriate blood tests and evaluations, she was relieved to hear the diagnosis, especially after watching the movie "Wit," with Emma Thompson, she said.

Harvey said the movie was such a frightening experience that she remembered the exact date - Feb. 23, 2001.

In the movie, Thompson's character has terminal ovarian cancer.

"I scared myself shitless," Harvey said. "At that point, I was like, 'Shit, I'm going to die.'"

For three or four months after that, Harvey said she couldn't sleep

For more information

If you have possible symptoms of polycystic ovary syndrome, such as menstrual cycle problems or trouble getting pregnant, see your doctor for an exam. PCOS increases your risks of infertility, metabolic syndrome, uterine cancer, diabetes, and heart disease.

No single test can show that you have PCOS. Your doctor will talk to you about your medical history, do a physical exam, and run some lab tests. You may also have an ultrasound scan of your pelvis.

Women should get a breast exam every three years starting at age 20. They should get a Pap smear and pelvic exam annually at age 18 or once they are sexually active.

Sen. Clinton to make run in 2008 race

Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., announced her candidacy for the 2008 Democratic Party's presidential nomination Saturday.

During a public appearance yesterday, Clinton said she decided to run after talking to family, friends and supporters since her re-election to the Senate in November, according to The Associated Press.

"It was a thorough review for me about the problems we confront in the country, the particular strengths and talents I would bring - both to the race and the White House," she said.

Clinton expressed confidence in her presidential prospects and said she awaits a spirited contest for the nomination, according to the report.

"It'll be a great contest with a lot of talented people, and I'm very confident," Clinton said during the speech. "I'm in, I'm in it to win, and that's what I intend to do."

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, expressed her content regarding Clinton's nomination announcement.

"She's a serious candidate, and she has excellent credentials," Carlin said. "Now is the time for a woman to be in the race, and she is the woman to do it right now. She's a

Brownback announces candidacy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA, Kan. - Kansas Sen. Sam Brownback jumped into the 2008 presidential race Saturday, a favorite of the religious right now in an uphill battle against better known rivals for the GOP nomination.

"I am a conservative and I'm proud of being a conservative," he proclaimed. "My family and I are taking the first steps on the yellow brick road to the White House. It's a great journey," the two-term senator told hundreds of supporters. He pledged to fight on behalf of the nation's cultural values and to focus on rebuilding families.

The 50-year-old Brownback offers himself as a "full-scale Ronald Reagan conservative."

After Saturday's speech, he told reporters: "My positions are at the heart of where the Republican Party is. I'm willing to take those positions with all comers."

Brownback's announcement, planned weeks ago, came hours after Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., entered her party's 2008 race with a posting on her Web site with little prior notice.

"I don't know why she did that. I guess she's scared of me," Brownback said.

Street naming, march cap off week of King events

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan residents honored civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. Friday with a street, a march and a sculpture in his name.

The events began at Long's Park with "A Street Fit for a King," the dedication of 17th Street as Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Drive.

Mayor Bruce Snead spoke about the symbolism of street dedication and complimented the people who worked to make it happen.

"I was very impressed with their proposal and all those who contributed," Snead said.

The crowd then marched north, with police escorting them along 17th Street to Ahearn Field House. There were signs made by the Black Student Union, saying, "Don't kill the dream," "BSU for MLK," "KSU for MLK" and "Free at Last."

Juanita McGowan, assistant dean in diversity and director of American Ethnic Studies, said the parade was nostalgic of a real march during the civil rights movement.

"This march is a simulation of what Dr. King fought for," McGowan said. "I have been excited for this all week."

There were refreshments waiting at Ahearn, where several speakers commented on King's legacy and the commemorative bust about to be un-

Bizarre, funny or unusual stories from around the world

JAN. 1 SNOW FOR SALE ON EBAY

LOVELAND, Colo. — Call it a winter sale.

Jim and Mary Walker are selling snow on eBay. Starting bids were holding steady Friday at 99 cents for samples from "Blizzard I and Blizzard II."

The Walkers got the idea for selling snow after shoveling mounds from two storms a week apart that together dumped more than 4 feet along the Front Range.

"I figured eBay has ghosts and all sorts of weird stuff, so why not snow?" said Mary Walker, who teaches business workshops on employee communications.

She says she doesn't really expect to find a buyer for their blizzard overstock.

"We just wanted to just give some folks a laugh," she said.

JAN. 9 COLLEGIATE LOVE LESSONS

SIoux FALLS, S.D. — Beginning in February, the University of Sioux Falls will offer a one-credit dating course called "Finding Dates Worth Keeping."

Laurie Chaplin, a relationships counselor and licensed therapist who's been married 28 years, will be the instructor.

The course is offered through the USF Learning Institute, the same agency that offers seminars on wellness, job hunting and business communication.

"We go to college and get an education. But our love relationships impact us more than anything else," Chaplin said.

Today's young adults are "working harder to get smarter about their mates" and want lifelong relationships, she said.

JAN. 10 SCORPION ON A PLANE

MONTPELIER, Vt. — On a flight home from Chicago to Vermont, a scorpion stung David Sullivan on the back of his right leg, just below the knee, then crawled up and down his left leg, he thinks, before getting him again in the shin.

Sullivan, a 46-year-old builder from Stowe, was aboard the United Airlines flight when he awoke from a nap with a pain.

"My right leg felt like it was asleep, but that was isolated to one spot, and it felt like it was being jabbed with a sharp piece of plastic or something."

For a healthy adult, a scorpion sting can mean numbness or shooting pain, or flu-like symptoms, which Sullivan said he had the next day.

JAN. 14 MAN RIDES BIKE FOR 85 HOURS

BURR RIDGE, Ill. — George Hood might have pedaled his way into the Guinness Book of World Records on Saturday.

The 49-year-old Aurora resident began riding a stationary bike at the Five Seasons Sports Club in Burr Ridge at 4 a.m. Wednesday and surpassed the previous record of 82 hours by 8:28 p.m. Saturday. He stopped several minutes before midnight after completing his goal of 85 hours.

Hood hoped the feat would help raise thousands of dollars for the Illinois chapter of COPS, an organization that helps the families of slain police officers.

Hood raised $25,000 for the group — $5,000 more than his goal.

JAN. 16 SURFING MUSLIMS UNVEIL 'BURKINI'

SYDNEY, Australia — In a lycra revolution, a cover-all swimming costume is bringing Muslim women to Australian beaches as lifeguards, unzipping tensions which divided parts of Sydney little over a year ago.

The two-piece "burkini", popular in the Middle East, is proving key to reshaping surf lifesaving Down Under — once a bastion of white Australian culture and still a heartland of the country's sun-bronzed, heroic self-myth.

"I am Australian so I always have the Australian lifestyle, but now with the burkini, it just allowed me to participate in it more. We used to always go to the beach, but now that I have the burkini I can actually swim," Mecca Laalaa, 22, told Reuters.

Laalaa is one of 24 young Australians of Arab heritage who recently signed up to a 10-week training course run by Surf Life Saving Australia aimed at widening the racial mix on beaches.

The full-length lycra suit with hijab head-covering is not too figure hugging to embarrass, but is tight enough to allow its wearer to swim freely. It will soon be manufactured in the iconic red and yellow of Australia's surf life saving movement.

"We are surrounded by water all over Australia. It is totally encouraged for us from all the schools, no matter what school you go to," burkini manufacturer Aheda Zanetti said.

"So when these girls decide and choose to wear the veil, they decide to stop doing that. We didn't want to do that."

Web site claims to help students better manage time, tasks, work load

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For more information
Visit Gradefix's Web site, www.gradefix.com.

Former University of Utah student Mark Polson had classes, a job and a limited amount of time to study.

After planning ahead and calculating a certain amount of time per week for each task, Polson said he discovered a way to raise his grade point average. He said he thought his system could help other students and decided to develop an electronic version.

Polson, along with two former University of Utah students, Mac Newbold and Taylor Miller, founded Gradefix.com, a Web site that uses an algorithm to help students strategically plan their tasks around the amount of time they have available.

"A lot of what we do is just apply common sense to what students don't get done in homework and studying," said Newbold, Gradefix chief software architect. "It's not so much how much time you put in, but it's how you put in the time and use it in most effective ways."

The Web site originally was introduced Sept. 1, 2006, but a revised version was re-introduced Jan. 8 in response to user feedback, Newbold said. University of Utah professors, several textbooks and Web sites were consulted for research before the site was developed, Polson said.

Polson said the only marketing done for the site has been through a press release and several online technology reviews. Since the site is now used in more than 30 countries, Polson said he is in the process of adding translations for non-English speaking countries.

"The amazing thing about the Internet is just how people tell other people," Polson said. "Never in our wildest dreams would we have believed we would incorporate the whole world in 3 1/2 months."

There are two versions of Gradefix available — free and premium. The free version allows students to plan up to 10 tasks, or about two weeks, in advance.

For $5 a month, students can access the premium version and plan up to six months in advance, Polson said. The first 30 days of the premium version are free of charge with no obligations, he said.

Polson said students should use caution with services like Gradefix.

"Gradefix doesn't do your homework for you; you still have to actually do it," Polson said. "We can't promise any results that you don't do for yourself. We can plan it out for you, but we can't do it for you."

While he had not seen Gradefix's site, Fred Newton, English and Counseling Services director, said it is not uncommon for students to use Web sites to plan their time.

Newton said students should use similar sites to fit their needs.

"Any time you get something on the Internet, you have to measure it to what might work and what might not work — you can't formalize everything," he said. "Most of the Web sites have helpful tips that you can use, which is helpful to see what fits and what doesn't fit."

Tank's Tavern opens despite snow

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A few inches of snow were not enough to stop Tank's Tavern — Aggieville's newest establishment — from having a decent opening night Saturday.

The night marked the end of months of construction and preparations for owner Brett Allred.

"I spent all day, from the time I woke up to the time that I went to bed, working on this place," Allred said as he served drinks Saturday afternoon. "It was about four months' worth of that."

Allred, who sold his Manhattan hot-tub business in May 2006, said he always liked business and has spent several years working in bars and restaurants.

"We drove around for a while looking at properties, and we liked this one," he said of the property at 712 N. Manhattan Ave. "It did take us a while to get the lease that we wanted, but everything worked out well in the end."

The bar opened at noon, and people showed up throughout the day. A crowd formed by 2:30 p.m.

Many came to watch the Amid smoke and colorful flashing lights, Tank's Tavern patrons enjoy the dance floor Saturday night. Tank's opened Saturday afternoon and features an island bar and dance floor.

K-State men's basketball game against Iowa State. While there weren't many screens, fans still found room.

"We will be getting more TVs — don't worry about that," Allred said.

The bait of a new bar and the game were enticement enough for many to brave the bad weather.

Claire Schrott, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, was one of the people to visit the bar early in the day.

"I came with one of my friends to watch the game," Schrott said. "I think that it's pretty cool so far. I'm also excited to see the dance club at night. I think that is going to be awesome."

As the night wore on, more and more people began to show up, which was a welcome sight to Allred.

Tank, the bar's canine namesake and mascot, also was present.

"We were kicking around names for the place and someone came up with 'Tanks' and it stuck," Allred said.

He said Tank took the noise and new people very well.

K-State recognized for affordability, value

By Eric Brown
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With tuition costs continually rising, results from two national publications insist students attending K-State are spending their money wisely.

The Princeton Review listed K-State as one of its Best 361 Colleges for 2007 and also one of the 150 best value colleges. Kiplinger Personal Finance magazine also named K-State as one of the 100 best values in public colleges.

"There are 3,000 colleges and universities in the country, and to receive this recognition from both of these publications is significant," said

Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

Princeton Review's rankings are based on academic statistics from colleges and surveys compiled throughout the year, surveying more than 115,000 college students across the country. Kiplinger combines academics, affordability and post-graduation debt.

"K-State is continually ranked on these lists, and this is a direct result of the instruction and student life we offer, and also the affordable costs of our university," Bosco said. "President Wefald has always been committed to putting the students first, and it's nice to see his commitment receive recognition."

Other Big 12 schools that made both lists: Iowa State University, Oklahoma State University, Texas A&M University, the University of Texas, the University of Colorado, the University of Kansas and the University of Oklahoma.

Josiah Feuerbacher, a 2006 graduate in mass communications, said he agreed with the recognition.

"I made the choice to go to K-State four years ago because, of all the other schools I looked at, K-State was not only the most affordable, but also seemed to have the best program for what I wanted to do," Feuerbacher said. "And now that I've graduated, I continue to feel that I made the right choice."

Patty Traxson, mother of a K-State graduate and a K-State junior, said her children made a good choice.

"When K-State receives national recognition like this, it reassures you that your children are getting their money's worth at college," said Traxson, who also graduated from K-State in 1981.

"K-State has always impressed me as a college that offers you a number of opportunities for a price that's very reasonable when compared to other colleges."

TO THE POINT

Women should listen to bodies, get check-ups

As medical knowledge increased and research grew more sophisticated, it became clear that women are not just smaller men, but in fact have a vastly different and highly distinctive physiology, according to Froedtert & the Medical College of Wisconsin.

And so began women's health.

Women have a whole system full of parts that can function irregularly, and awareness is important.

Women's health is not just for those who are pregnant or older women who have hysterectomies. It is for all women.

It is vital that women understand what can go wrong with their bodies and what their bodies are trying to tell them.

Something as simple as an irregular period signaled to Linda Harvey, instructor of journalism and mass communications, that something was wrong, and she was diagnosed with Polycystic Ovarian Syndrome.

There also are other issues.

Many college women need Pap smears, and surprisingly, not only have many not had one, but they have never seen a gynecologist for an examination.

The recent discovery that the human papillomavirus causes cervical cancer is further proof that women need to be informed.

And it is so easy – right on campus, Lafene Health Center offers services like examinations, STD testing, pregnancy counseling and contraceptives.

It is so cliché, but it is true: knowledge is power. Women should take the time to listen to what their bodies are saying and use that power to take better care of themselves.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Misplaced anger

People should face responsibility, not pass the buck unfairly

I've discovered in my old age that there are people who refuse to take responsibility for their actions, as well as people who simply are rude and hateful.

You see it every day at the store when people take out their frustrations on cashiers or food-service workers.

You can see it in the parking lots here at K-State and at the various office buildings on campus.

For instance, does anyone wonder why there are cameras at Parking Services? There is a sign stating that the cameras are in use to provide better customer service, but I haven't noticed any problem with the customer service there.

What I have noticed is a problem with the lack of civility on campus and in the world in general.

You couldn't pay me enough to work in Parking Services. Not to be a parking attendant, not to take people's money, not to be a campus police officer.

Same with the Controller's Office or financial aid.

Parking services catches most of the flak, I'd imagine. When someone gets a parking ticket, he or she has to pay for that mistake, but some people refuse to take responsibility for their errors. Instead, they scream and throw a fit because they got a wheel lock on their car or a fine for parking illegally.

I barely got enrolled this semester. I had two holds on my account – one was from Lafene Health Center and the other from the Controller's Office.

I did enroll, however, and it was in large part due to the kindness and understanding of the people involved.

The holds were and are my fault. I dropped out last semester and incurred a debt when I did. However, I failed to look on KATS to see I had that bill.

I knew about the bill at Lafene and am trying to pay it off, but it was still my fault there was a hold placed on my account.

This is what people fail to realize. There is a definite lack of responsibility and civility when it comes to taking charge of a person's own life.

The parking ticket can't possibly be the fault of the person receiving the fine. It must be because of the so-called "Parking Nazis" who gain enjoyment from the lack of parking resources on this campus.

Misplaced anger taken out on people who don't deserve it can make you feel better. But, in the end, it simply transfers the pain you are in to someone who simply had the bad luck of being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

If you treat Parking Services with respect and treat the Controller's Office workers as human beings who are there to help you through this myriad of classes that is K-State, then you just might get a little farther than if you go in furious and screaming.

I don't know about most people, but I am more likely to want to help someone who asks nicely and patiently for something than someone who demands help or is angry when they come in, over something that isn't anyone's fault but their own.

It can be frustrating trying to enroll and pay fees and park, but the people who catch the most ire and hate are the ones who least deserve it.

Government fails to back its own officials

It is not often I question the U.S. government and even less often that I stray from the Bush administration, but I've reached that point.

The law enforcement officers in this country work day in and day out to defend and clean up this country. When they get thrown under the bus by their own people, I have to start questioning people's motives.

Such is the case of Ignacio Ramos and Jose Alonso Compean, two of this country's Customs and Border Security Agents who are accused of civil rights violations.

Here are the facts from Fox News:

In February 2005, the two officers were pursuing Osvaldo Aldrete Davila, a known drug dealer. After Davila failed to stop and pulled what they thought was a weapon, the agents shot him. In his vehicle, they found more than $1 million in marijuana. He was treated in a U.S. hospital and released.

Now, you'd think the story would end here, but this is when it gets interesting. In exchange for testimony against the officers, Davila was set free and given immunity from prosecution with safe haven to Mexico. On top of that, Davila decided to do what any good American does and has since sued the U.S. government for $5 million in damages.

The testimony of the drug dealer earned the agents an arrest warrant, and they decided to turn themselves in rather than pay bail.

Now, you're thinking, "Surely President Bush can pardon them." You'd think so, but as of this weekend, he has not and seems to have no intentions of doing so. "People need to take a tough look at the facts, the evidence a jury looked at, as well as the judge," he said. "And I will do the same thing."

So what has happened to our government? It seems we now value a drug dealer's testimony more than that of our law enforcers, and the federal government has completely abandoned those who protect the very country they live in. Has our judicial system gone loco?

Unfortunately these two men, upon doing the job they were hired for, have fallen into the middle of what's become the largest political correctness problem to hit this country in quite awhile: our relationship with Mexico.

Why does our government turn its back on its own citizens in the interest of saving face with Mexico? I think the Hispanic population is so high in this area that they see it as a political advantage to side with the Mexican drug smuggler.

All I know is that I applaud the agents for what they've done. I wish more of our law enforcement agents and politicians thought the same way.

High birth control prices may backfire on lawmakers

By Cyndi Waite
DAILY NEBRASKAN

Next month, I'll be putting $38 in my vagina. And I gotta say, my sex life just isn't worth that much.

Birth control prices have skyrocketed, and the federal government is to blame.

The feds passed the Deficit Reduction Act of 2005 last year, but the effects it has on you, began in December 2006. Women, our $10 a month affordable fee for baby-less sex is now nonexistent, at least without a good insurance plan.

This Deficit Reduction Act aims to – well, reduce the country's deficit. The only real thing it's reducing is the ease with which women should be able to obtain birth control. The act, among other things, has decreased the ability for women to obtain birth control and subsequently increased the likelihood of unwanted pregnancies.

Any woman who isn't a member of the white, upper class, private-insurance-having American structure is now going to struggle to afford contraception.

If the Bush administration's intention is conditioning our population to believe in, live by and support conservative ideology about reproductive rights and sexuality, they better prepare themselves for a lot more people to condition, since so many will not be able to afford birth control.

And government, whether you make birth control, abortion or sex education available and/or affordable to us, we are going to have sex.

Birth control is a right. It's a right for you, for me, for every woman to choose whether or not she wants sex to lead to children. So here's what we do: we fight; we send e-mails to our congress members.

Part of having that right to choose is having the ability to obtain the necessary means to making that decision, which means being able to afford our contraception. Let us all go back to putting $12.50, instead of $38, in our vaginas.

WORLD NEWS

STRIFE IN IRAQ, LEBANON MIGHT SPILL INTO SYRIA

DAMASCUS, Syria — Syria has a religious makeup as potentially explosive as that in Lebanon or Iraq, but it has long seemed immune to sectarian strife. Now, some are wondering if spill-over violence from those two countries will spark religious animosity here.

Four decades of secular rule under the authoritarian Baath Party have largely muted sectarian differences in Syria, with the exception of a bloody campaign by Sunni militants in the 1980s to topple the regime of the late President Hafez Assad.

Assad and his successor, son Bashar Assad, belong to the country's Alawite minority, followers of a Shiite sect. Their inner circles have been dominated by Alawites.

But Sunni Arabs make up an estimated 60 percent of Syria's population, with the rest divided among Christians, Druse, Shiites and Alawites.

With divisions between Sunnis and Shiites deepening across the region due to the turmoil in Iraq, some are concerned the delicate balance in this nation of 18 million people could be threatened.

"There could be a domino effect across the Arab world," said Ayman Abdul-Nour, a reform-minded member of Syria's Baath Party.

Syrians now openly discuss their country's ethnic and religious makeup, something that was unthinkable 10 years ago.

For instance, Sunnis are grumbling about persistent rumors that Shiite Iran, Syria's closest foreign backer, was offering incentives to persuade Syrian Sunnis to convert.

Salah Kiftaro, who runs one of Syria's largest Islamic institutions, dismissed the rumors as false, but also cautioned that close ties to Iran should not open the door for Shiite evangelizing.

INDONESIAN EARTHQUAKE; CHANCE OF TSUNAMI

JAKARTA, Indonesia — A 7.3-magnitude earthquake struck Sunday in the Molucca Sea about 100 miles east of Sulawesi Island in northeastern Indonesia, the U.S. Geological Survey said.

The quake was large enough to cause a tsunami, the Pacific Tsunami Warning Center said in a statement, but no tsunami warning was immediately issued.

The epicenter of the major quake was about 80 miles from the city of Ternate, in northeastern Indonesia, it said. It had a depth of more than six miles below the ocean floor.

An official with the Pacific Tsunami Warning Center in Hawaii said a basin-wide tsunami — one that travels a great distance — isn't expected, though a tsunami near the earthquake's site is possible.

"Given the size of the earthquake, we think a basin-wide tsunami isn't likely, though a local tsunami could be possible," Brian Shiro, a geophysicist at the center, said.

CRASH, ATTACKS KILL 19 U.S. SERVICE MEMBERS

BAGHDAD, Iraq — At least 19 American service members were killed in military operations Saturday in the deadliest day for U.S. forces in two years. Twelve died in a helicopter crash, and five were slain in an attack by militia fighters in Karbala, military officials said.

Saturday's toll was the third-highest of any single day since the war began in March 2003, eclipsed only by 37 U.S. deaths on Jan. 26, 2005, and 28 on the third day of the U.S. invasion. U.S. authorities also announced two American combat deaths from Friday.

The heavy toll comes at a time of rising congressional opposition to President Bush's decision to dispatch 21,500 soldiers to the conflict to try to curb sectarian violence.

The military gave little information on the crash of the Army Black Hawk helicopter during good weather in Diyala province, northeast of Baghdad. U.S. and Iraqi forces have been battling Sunni insurgents and Shiite militias for months there near Baqouba.

Lt. Col. Josslyn Aberle, a U.S. spokesperson, said the cause of the crash had not been determined. Navy Capt. Frank Pascual, a member of a U.S. media relations team in the United Arab Emirates, told Al-Arabiya television that the helicopter was believed to have suffered technical troubles before going down.

The military initially said 13 people were on board but corrected the number on Sunday, saying 12 soldiers died.

Five U.S. soldiers were killed Saturday night when militia fighters attacked a provincial headquarters in the Shiite holy city of Karbala, the military said in a statement.

The statement said "an illegally armed militia group" attacked the building with grenades, small arms and indirect fire, which usually means mortars or rockets. The statement said three other soldiers were wounded repelling the attack.

Stress leads to poor 'sleep hygiene'

By Ben Hedges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A good night's sleep is a commodity that can be hard to come by as a college student.

With class, work and a social life, finding time to get enough sleep can be a task in itself.

"We, as Americans, whether we are campus-age or older, tend to sacrifice sleep," Don Hedden, sleep lab director at Lafene Health Center, said. "We've got a thousand things to do — 'I'll keep doing those things, and I'll get to sleep later.'"

Hedden said a typical person should get 7 1/2 to 9 hours of uninterrupted sleep every night.

"Setting up a routine sleep — we call it 'sleep hygiene' in the field — is where there are things you just do all the time," Hedden said.

Hedden said good sleep hygiene consists of keeping your internal clock on track by committing to a daily bed wake-up time, not consuming caffeine or nicotine before bed and keeping the room at a cool temperature for sleeping.

Art Rathbun, counselor and biofeedback specialist for University Counseling Services, said the stress of college is one of the main causes for students' lack of sleep.

"There are lots of things in college that make it difficult for students to stay in a normal sleep pattern," Rathbun said.

Homework and exams sometimes are at the forefront of a student's stress level. Rathbun said the busy periods of exams and the dormant periods between exams can disrupt a student's normal sleep patterns.

He also said there are other influences of stress. Living with a roommate for the first time and partying also can be taxing on a student's ability to sleep.

Erin Fay and Patricia Pyra, both juniors in interior architecture and product design, said they have had trouble getting enough sleep.

"It's hard trying to study for two tests at the same time and having a project due," Pyra said.

Fay said she would take advantage of breaks between classes to go home and nap.

"I slept whenever I possibly could," Fay said.

Hedden and Rathbun both said students should take it upon themselves to try to maintain good sleep hygiene. Resorting to over-the-counter drugs is something that should be used as a last resort and only after speaking with a doctor.

Rathbun warns that taking medication can lead to problems if taken for a long period of time.

"Those kind of medications can cause rebound insomnia," Rathbun said. "If you need to have medication, you should go to a doctor first and have it prescribed and monitored."

Discipline, diet and exercise are the best methods of getting the proper amount of sleep.

"Stress management is the key to sleep," Hedden said. "Students need to find some mechanism to help them deal with their stress."

"I'm like Oral Roberts. I don't like to work to empty seats." — Bob Huggins.

Huggins' revival needs student support

They seem like an odd pair — the basketball coach and the televangelist. But when you get down to the heart of it, Bob Huggins and Oral Roberts are after the same thing: revival.

Roberts' revival was the spiritual kind, delivered to the teeming masses in tents and auditoriums across the country.

Meanwhile, Bramlage Coliseum serves as the main venue for Brother Huggins' Traveling Salvation Show.

That's where Huggins delivers sideline sermons laced with hellfire and brimstone. In his solid black suit and white cowboy boots, Huggins even looks the part of an impassioned Bible-thumper.

Problem is, the sanctuary isn't always full.

"They want to come in and do this 'Huggieville' thing, then fill it," Huggins said. "I don't want my name associated with something that's half right."

Huggins said that on his postgame radio show after less than 9,000 fans showed up to K-State's game against Baylor Wednesday.

Most concerning to Huggins were the 2,500 empty student seats.

"We're early in the semester," Huggins said. "They can't be studying that hard yet, can they? We need to have this place full of students."

The Baylor game was hardly an aberration. While K-State sold out its allotment of 4,600 student tickets, average student attendance has been less than 2,000, Joni Weinman, assistant director of marketing, said.

"We've tried to pinpoint reasons why students weren't showing up, but after the Baylor game we were really confused," Weinman said. "It was the first Big 12 Conference game after winter break, and we still had less than half of the students (who purchased tickets) come out and support the team."

Yes, the game was on a Wednesday, and no, Baylor isn't a high-profile opponent. But to me, that's not the whole story.

See, revival doesn't happen overnight.

For the better part of two decades, K-State basketball was merely a sideshow to Bill Snyder's football program.

And for all the hype surrounding Huggins' arrival, it's clear K-State isn't a basketball school just yet.

"I think part of our challenge is for Kansas State basketball to become a thing to do, like football became at some point in the '90s," associate athletics director Casey Scott said. "It's been a long, long time since basketball mattered here. We've gone through generations of students who have never experienced championship-caliber basketball."

The K-State teams of the last 15 years were the worst kind to root for. They were good enough to get your hopes up and bad enough to break your heart every time. That, I think, made some fans skeptical and slow to commit.

But let's make one thing clear: this isn't the same old close-but-no-cigar K-State team. That team wouldn't have beaten Southern California in Las Vegas and wouldn't have won at both Iowa State and Missouri. The basketball culture is changing, and it's time for the student body to get on board.

There's absolutely no excuse for a less-than-capacity crowd at a Big 12 game, or any game for that matter. K-State fans wanted a winning program, a basketball culture like the one down the road in Lawrence. The administration did its part, and now the students need to live up to their end of the deal.

"Students not only affect the other team — students also encourage other fans to stand up and be loud, too," Weinman said. "We hope students understand the effect they can have on a close game, and we hope the students can show the new coaching staff that K-State does have a great student body."

Amen.

'Hilton Magic' does not prevent K-State win

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Iowa State's "Hilton Magic" didn't seem to faze K-State during the Wildcats' 69-60 victory Saturday.

For most of the game, the 14,356 fans in attendance at Hilton Coliseum were not a factor. K-State (13-6, 3-2 Big 12) kept them quiet by jumping out to an early lead and never letting the Cyclones (11-8, 2-3 Big 12) get any closer than six.

Saturday's win was K-State's first at Iowa State since a 67-62 victory in 1999.

After both teams shot less than 40 percent in the first half, the Wildcats took a 26-16 lead into the break. It was the fewest number of points K-State has given up in the first half to a Big 12 Conference opponent since holding Texas A&M to 13 in 2002.

Iowa State junior Jiri Hubalek did most of the early scoring for his team, leading the Cyclones with 10 first-half points. The only other Iowa State player to make a shot before halftime was freshman Wesley Johnson, who scored four first-half points.

Junior David Hoskins led the Wildcats in the first half, scoring 11 points with four rebounds. Coming off the bench, senior Cartier Martin knocked down a pair of 3-pointers to finish with six points at halftime.

The closest Iowa State came to staging a comeback was when freshman Dodie Dunson hit a 3-pointer to cut the Wildcats' lead to 39-33 with 13:12 left in the game. K-State responded with a 6-0 run that pushed the lead back into double figures.

After being held scoreless in the first half, Iowa State junior Mike Taylor scored 21 points in the second half, finishing with 17 points.

Hoskins picked up his first career double-double, scoring 22 and grabbing a career-high 11 rebounds. Hoskins has scored in double figures in 12 consecutive games.

Senior Lance Harris and Martin scored 18 and 17, respectively.

The Wildcats play Chicago State at 7 tonight in Bramlage Coliseum.

David Hoskins drives to the basket against Baylor Wednesday. Hoskins helped K-State to a 69-60 win by pouring in 22 points and adding a season-high 11 rebounds. Christopher Hanewinkel COLLEGIAN

It might be Baylor's magic number.

In its last two outings against the Wildcats, the Bears have finished with 79 points, and in each of those games, Baylor (16-3, 3-2 Big 12) was the victor. The streak continued Saturday afternoon, as the Wildcats fell 79-70 in Waco, Texas.

The Wildcats (14-4, 2-3 Big 12) came out strong against the No. 13 Bears and led 37-35 with just more than three minutes remaining in the first half after junior Kimberly Dietz connected on a 3-point shot.

The Bears responded with a 10-1 run to close out the first half with a 45-38 lead.

Senior Bernice Mosby paced the Bears with a season-high 29 points. Mosby, an All-America candidate averaging 24.4 points and 12.2 rebounds against Top 25 opponents this season, also grabbed 10 rebounds to earn her ninth double-double of the season.

Freshman Latara Darrett added 15 points and nine rebounds in her second career start, and sophomore Jessica Tisdale finished with 14 and 12 points, respectively.

The Wildcats continued to apply the pressure in the second half but fell behind by as much as 11 before they were able to pull within two after a jump shot from junior Shana Wheeler brought the score to 72-70 with less than three minutes remaining.

Those would be the final two points for K-State.

Again, Baylor, which out-rebounded K-State 40-27, responded with a run to close out the half, scoring seven unanswered points to finish.

K-State was led by senior Claire Coggins and sophomore Shalee Lehning, who each recorded 20 points. Coggins also added four rebounds and three steals, and Lehning grabbed five rebounds.

Freshman Ashley Sweat finished the game with 10 points and seven rebounds.

With the win, Baylor extended its streak against K-State to five games and leads the all-time series 10-9.

The Wildcats will return to Bramlage Coliseum at 7 p.m. Wednesday to face Kansas.

TRK | Wildcat track team comes through for the Big 12

Laci Heller said her rhythm was off at the Conference Challenge meet in Lincoln, Neb., Saturday, but it might not have been her fault.

She was not accustomed to the throwing surface.

Heller said she usually throws from a wooden circle, but the concrete surface at Devaney Sports Center slowed her down, throwing her off her rhythm.

Heller

But even with the trouble, Heller, a junior, won the weight throw for the Big 12 Conference with a throw of 62-5 1/2.

The Big 12 defeated the Mountain West 223 to 144 in the first-ever Conference Challenge.

"The Big 12 is just better than the other conference," Heller said.

Sophomore Scott Sellers won the triple jump with a jump of 48-4. It was the first time he competed in the triple jump at the collegiate level. He has already qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships meet in the high jump.

With Sellers absent in the high jump, senior Lamar Garrett won the event with a jump of 6-9 1/2. In the KSU All-Comers meet, Garrett cleared a height of 6-10 1/4.

Senior Kaylene Wagner won the women's high jump for her fourth straight title in the event. This time her jump was 6-1/2.

Junior Morgan Bonds won the 800-meter run, and senior Monique Coleman won the 200-meter run.

Bonds, who has qualified provisionally for the NCAA meet, had the winning time of 2:08.95. Coleman ran the 200-meter in a time of 24.74.

The 4x400 meter women's relay team also won.

The team consists of freshman Laura Smith, senior Candace Mills, Bonds and Coleman. They finished with a time of 3:50.14, which is the fastest time this year by the women's 4x400 team.

In the first meet of the season, the women's tennis team had seven singles victories and three doubles victories.

Junior Tamar Kvaratskhelia defeated Mississippi State's Elna de Villiers Friday (0-6, 6-3, 6-4).

Also in singles, sophomore Maria Perevoshchikova defeated Mississippi State's DeAndrea Saddler (6-1, 0-6, 3-0).

On the first day of doubles, Kvaratskhelia and Perevoshchikova defeated Troy's pairing of Suzanne Jones and Caroline Jounia (8-4).

Junior Olga Klimova and sophomore Katerina Kudlackova also won on the first day, beating Troy's Rawia El Sisi and Claudia Strauss (8-4). Before the tournament, El Sisi and Strauss were ranked No. 46 by the Intercollegiate Tennis Association.

Kudlackova defeated Mississippi State's Renee Joseph Saturday in singles play (7-5, 7-6). Klimova also defeated Troy's Nicole Shaw (6-3, 6-2).

In doubles, juniors Fernanda De Valle and Viviana Yrurita defeated Mississippi State's de Villiers and Saddler (8-5).

On Sunday, Kudlackova defeated de Villiers (6-3, 6-4). Klimova defeated Mississippi State's Tatiana Feit (4-6, 7-5, 6-2), and Perevoshchikova defeated Jounia (6-4, 6-0).

In doubles play, all three of K-State's teams fell. Klimova and Kudlackova were defeated by Georgia's Monika Dancevic and Kelley Hyndman (9-7). De Valle and Yrurita were defeated by Georgia's Yvette Hyndman and Darya Ivanov (8-2), and freshman Natasha Vieira and Perevoshchikova lost to Georgia's Lara Fakhoury and Natalie Frazier (8-5).

The next tournament for K-State will be a home dual against Drake on Saturday. It will begin at noon in Ahearn Field House.

BKN | Garnett suspended swinging at Pistons' McDye

NEW YORK — The NBA suspended Kevin Garnett for one game Sunday for throwing a punch at Detroit's Antonio McDye.

Garnett won't play Sunday night when Minnesota visits the Phoenix Suns. He leads the Timberwolves with 22.2 points and 12.8 rebounds per game.

With 5:18 left in the fourth quarter of the Pistons' double-overtime victory over the Timberwolves Friday night, McDye knocked Minnesota's Mark Madsen to the floor with a forearm shove.

Garnett then chucked the ball at McDye, who charged at Garnett with his fist cocked. Garnett was poised to punch, too, and took a swipe at McDye as he partially retreated.

veiled. The whole concept of the MLK bust began with the idea of a plaque that turned into a monument for King.

Dan Lykins, member of Kansas Board of Regents, originally thought there should be a plaque in Ahearn to remember when Dr. King spoke at K-State in 1968, a speech Lykins attended. He said K-State was the only school in Kansas that invited King to speak.

"Dr. King's footprints and footsteps would always be at K-State," Lykins said.

Mirta Chavez, director of multicultural programming for the office of diversity and dual career development, and Myra Gordon, associate provost for diversity and dual career development, were already planning something for King.

Gordon said she asked Richard Bergen, the artist who made the "Ad Astra" sculpture for the top of the State Capitol building, to work on the memorial.

"I said I would do it for the smallest amount of money that I could and do it the best that I could," Bergen said.

Gordon said she wanted some type of landscaping around the bust so it would not stand alone.

Members of National Organization of Minority Architect Students took up the project and designed the Coretta Scott King Gardens of Engagement. They presented their plans Friday.

The gardens will form three overlapping circles to represent education, reflection and action.

President Jon Wefald gave many accolades to King.

"We love him because he tried to make America a better place," he said to noticeable agreement from the audience. "We will never forget his contributions, and his legacy will live on for years to come."

Actor James Reynolds, who was born in Oskaloosa, Kan., was the keynote speaker. He played the longest-running African American character in history with his role on "Days of Our Lives" and is a community activist working with many charities for the disadvantaged.

"Dr. King said on the Lincoln Memorial, 'None of us will be free until we join together and when we find we are more alike than we are different,'" Reynolds said.

The crowd then went outside for the bust unveiling.

"We give ourselves to something that will last, in creating a place that is sacred and a place where we can educate and meditate," Gordon said.

James Butler, a K-State alumnus who first came to Manhattan in 1926, was a distinguished elder at the ceremony and said he approved of the ceremony.

"Although it was so cold that I almost froze, I am happy to see the community working more closely with the campus to accomplish something like this," Butler said.

and she cried all the time. Several of the symptoms Thompson's character had in the movie were symptoms she had.

After watching the movie, she decided to get checked out for PCOS.

"That movie lit a fire in me that said, 'Hey, you're going to have to deal with your health,'" Harvey said. "It's scary, but you have to do it."

After she was diagnosed, Harvey said it was an absolute relief to find out why her body was not working right.

LIFE AFTER DIAGNOSIS

After women are diagnosed with PCOS, they often become depressed, Harvey said. She was no exception.

"When your life physically becomes a struggle, you do deal with depression," she said. "It's been one of those things that's clinically proven that when you're dealing with a chronic illness, you're going to deal with depression."

Harvey said PCOS also makes women emotional.

"Sometimes I can be a complete and absolute raving bitch to my boyfriend," she said. "He's just like, 'What's your problem?'"

Along with PCOS, Harvey also has insulin resistance, which she describes as a precursor to diabetes. About three years ago, she was diagnosed with fibromyalgia, a rheumatoid condition accompanied by chronic pain.

"There's a lot of pain, a lot of fatigue, a lot of exhaustion," she said.

On a weekly basis, she is required to take a lot of medication. She takes glucophage to regulate her insulin and glucose levels. She takes opiates, and she wears a birth control patch. She said the birth control patch is not used to keep from getting pregnant.
